As we came back toward home, we saw sad ruin in our suburban community, with trees down across the village square, in churchyard, across the main street. Toward home, we saw that a big Norway spruce in Neighbor John's yard had been uprooted. But nary a thing done to us except small branches blown off.

March 24 Away on a business trip and in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, tonight. When I get here, I always aim to call home on the phone. So called tonight, to find Maggie in a dither.

She told me our pump has gone bad. That's our sole water supply, for we live beyond a water main. Pump simply refuses to work. She blames me because I hadn't taken care of it months ago.

The indirect approach

PROBLEM: No real reason for the curves. Visitors cut corners, wear out grass.

SOLUTION NO. 1

. . . and what's good about both solutions:

1 The new walk in both solutions has been made of concrete since it connects with a concrete street walk.

2 The new planting in both cases prevents corner-cutting by careless visitors and keeps them on the walk. The planting also provides a reason for the curves, making them appear necessary to get around trees and shrubs.

3 The new trees and shrubs also give visual setback to the house, so that it now seems farther from street.

4 The first solution has the advantage of minimizing the service entrance. The second solution, on the other hand, provides an unbroken front lawn to give the house a setting without distractions.

Stumbling-block steps

PROBLEM: The curving steps are an invitation to a bad fall since they are spaced wrong for normal walking gait.

SOLUTION . . . and what's good about it:

1 White stripes, 2 inches wide, have been painted on the edge of each step. They are easy to see in the dark and therefore help you locate the steps at night.

2 A low, broad planting of Pfitzer junipers has been put in on each side of the steps, making the steps seem wider and safer.

3 A vaporproof light has been installed at right side of first step, making for surer footing at night. Such lights are easy to install on a simple wood or concrete bracket, low and close to the steps. The shrubs help hide the installation. If there is a side wall alongside the steps, use a flush step light which sets into a waterproof box in the wall.

4 Although not used in this solution, a handrail can be added for extra convenience and safety. For wider steps, the handrail can be erected down the center.

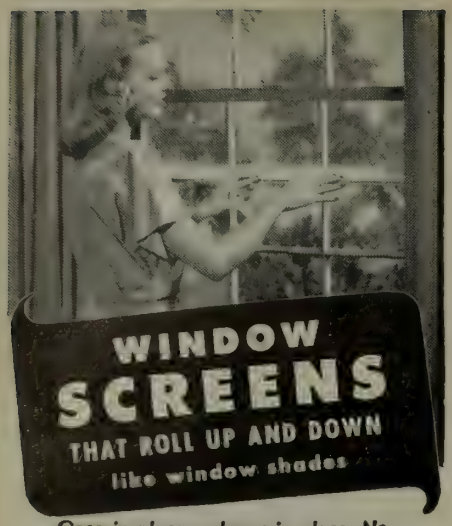
Does a large house overawe your walk?

PROBLEM: Small walk looks badly out of proportion to size of large house.



SOLUTION . . . and what's good about it:

1 The small path has been removed, and a wide, curved walk laid across front of the house. The indirect approach gives the illusion of more space and provides the large Colonial house with needed setback from the street. Such a wide-swinging curve suits a wide house on a wide lot, but it should be remembered that the same type of curved path usually looks silly in front of a small Cape Cod house.

2 Besides improving appearance, the new walk has also made access to the house easier, especially where main foot traffic comes from the side of the house opposite the garage driveway.

3 The busy foundation planting has been eliminated. This was accomplished without making any new planting, and the evergreens are the same as before; but they have been permitted to grow together rather than kept as sheared freaks. Such base planting is needed to emphasize the broad, gracious lines of a large Colonial house. The former planting created a vertical emphasis which was completely out of character.

Once in place—always in place. No putting up . . . No taking down . . . No painting . . . No storing . . . No repairing.

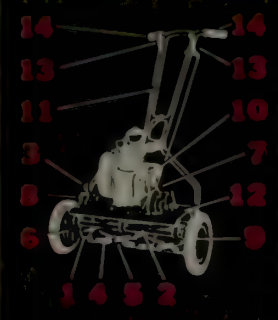
Is your sloping walk a rainy-day hazard?

PROBLEM: Path slopes from house to street, making it dangerous when wet or icy. Owner not ready to rebuild path.

SOLUTION . . . and what's good about it:

1 Grooves have been cut into the sloping walk. They not only give a fair measure of skidproofing, but also tend to attract attention to the walk so that visitors look where they are stepping. The grooves were readily cut into the concrete with a motorized carborundum stone, and are 8 inches apart, about 1/16 inch deep.



2 The steps at both street and door have been lighted below eye level by vaporproof lamps. The lighting not only makes the steps safer but draws eye attention down and makes visitors aware of the slope.

3 The foundation planting has been lowered and extended along the entire foundation line. Besides knitting the house and site together, it also helps to keep the eye level down. Window boxes and vines which might make one look up have been avoided, and won't go in until after the dangerous path is replaced.

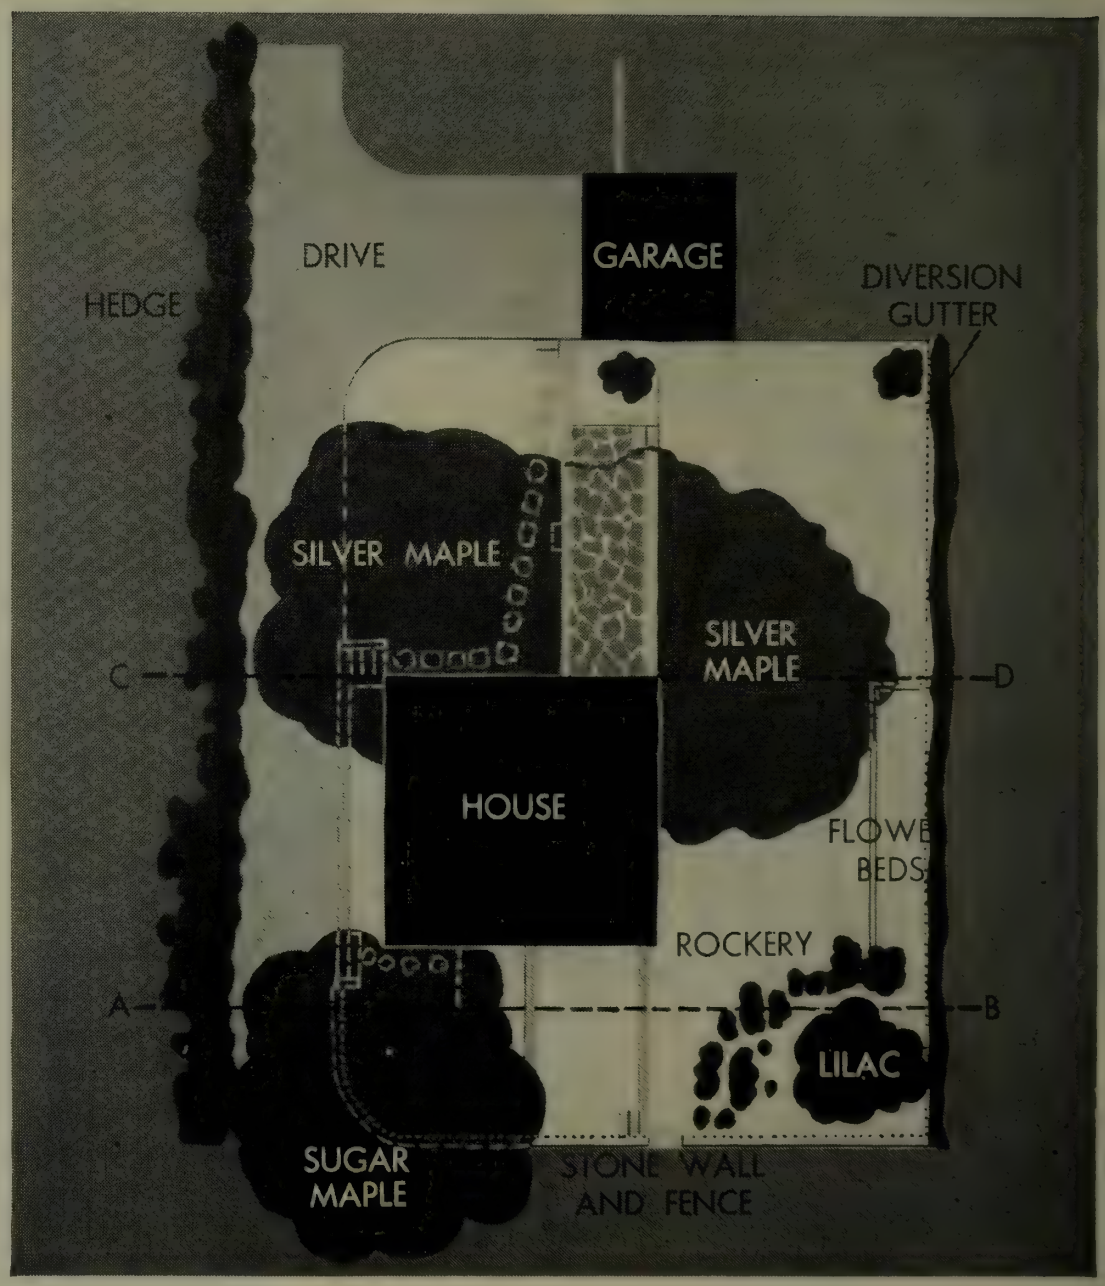
How to live on a slope and like it

By E. Helaine Lintleman
Landscape architect

YOUR house is probably much newer than ours. Your land may slide only one way downhill. But you can still use several of the devices we found good with a house 150 years old and land that dropped 15 feet just while crossing our house front and fell off almost as rapidly front to back.

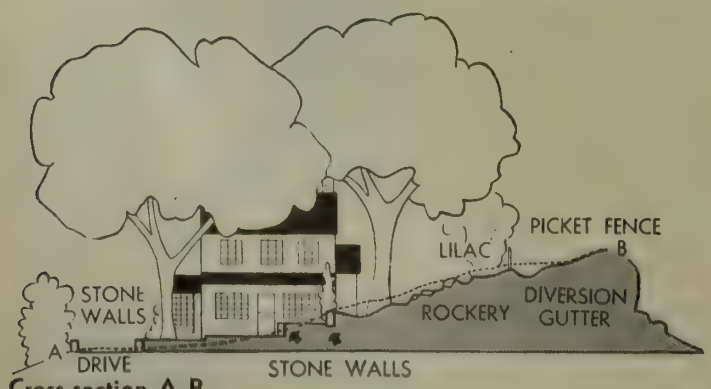
What we did here, you can do, with the same big gains in living space outside, drier house walls, and a much better look all around.

Anytime you change a grade, soil must be moved, and that means muscle work. So better make a plan as we did and work to your plan. That way, you make no useless motions.



Every wheelbarrowful does its bit toward stopping the bad runoff of your topsoil, or brings nearer the day when you can sprawl at ease on your new terrace in complete privacy and full of good will toward your neighbors.

We still wonder why earlier occupants didn't wash away during the first 150 years of our handsome old Bucks County, Pennsylvania, home, now so livable and dry.



The tiny side windows, 5 feet from the dining-room floor, open out at ground level. And our hill mounts abruptly from there. The first and most obvious problem was to stop the runoff from the hill from coursing right through the house.

The pictures show how we did it.

In the flat, our plot plan could be anyone's well-organized home property. Compare lines A-B and C-D with profiles below to visualize the remodeling problem created by the steep sloping land

Cross section A-B

Dotted line here shows original slope across front. Two shallow gutters, kept in sod, now divert water away from house wall

Cross section D-C

The slope across the back of the house was made into space we can use by grading it into four step-terraces held by low walls

Velvetgreen

PLANT FOOD

For All Growing Things

Mansion or bungalow, it's easy to add new, natural beauty to your grounds with Velvetgreen, Armour's complete, better-balanced plant food. Begin with your lawn. In the spring, grass roots are reaching for food — for the complete nourishment that Velvetgreen provides. Feed Velvetgreen. See how your lawn comes up thick and green, days earlier than unfed lawns.

And plan to feed Velvetgreen to shrubs, flowers, trees and garden vegetables, too. It gives remarkable results with all plants because: (1) it builds deeper, stronger root systems; (2) develops sturdier stems and leaves; (3) makes finer flowers, fruits, vegetables.

Remember — for greater natural beauty all around your home, feed Velvetgreen. At your garden supply dealer's.

How to live on slope

1 The curved top stringers of our fence were made by sawing cuts halfway through the 2x4's, blowing sawdust out, bending the "vertebrate" pieces to desired curves. The 4x4 posts were bolted to iron braces already cemented into the wall

Photographs: Gottscho-Schleisner

2 A good rear view of our remodeled two-way slope as it looks from the wall that holds the bank above the garage entrance. Well masked by small-leaf hollies, dwarf pines, and yews, a sturdy concrete wall thwarts all thrust of winter frost action against the new terrace floor

With the living-room floor 2 feet below the road and only a 25-foot back, our problem in front was to make the road seem as remote as ssible. So on its outer side the front wall is now 1 foot above the road, d the boundary further raised with a stepped-down picket fence

From the lower inside level, the problem was to avoid a too prison-ike wall, and to accommodate wall and fence to the land which drops off rapidly toward the rear of the house. The white fence not only pro-ects our front yard but is easily picked up by car headlights at night

Spring pruning

Shape shrubs by pruning

The way you prune shrubs will depend on the way you want them to grow. Remove suckers as here if you want the bush to grow tall into tree form. If you want it to grow into a spreading bush, let the strong shoots grow up from the base and content yourself with removing weak and dead wood and branches which spoil the shape of the shrub. Rejuvenate old and scraggly shrubs by completely removing one-third of the oldest branches to the ground each spring.

Some types of trees are very prone to put out useless and unattractive water sprouts near the ground and from the upper edges of branches. Nip them off with your hand pruners, and make sure you leave no stubs. Many fruit trees put out water sprouts from limbs; remove them at once because they grow vigorously but seldom produce fruit.

Correct vine patterns

You can do a good job of pruning vines now because their pattern stands out clearly. All winterkilled wood should be cut off to just above the first living bud. Then stand back, take a good look at the branch pattern, and remove all stems whose growth is going to spoil the appearance.

There's a wrong way

Here is a sad example of wrong pruning. The owner of this shrub tried to get new growth by whacking it off. Stumps are decaying and the bush is an eyesore. New growth can be forced with many shrubs by cutting back to the ground, but not 6 inches above it. Such action, plus heavy feeding, might still give this plant a fair chance to pull through.

Grow begonias—

make much bigger, showier plants.

For best results and a longer season, start begonia tubers into growth indoors. In the northern half of the country do this between the first of March and the middle of April.

Spread your tubers out in a warm spot—65 degrees and up, in an open tray or box. They need no soil at this stage. Sprinkle lightly each day until each shows the first sign of a pink nose.

On tubers under 2 inches in diameter, better let only one shoot develop. If more shoots start to push out, rub off the weaker ones.

Once growth starts, plant your tubers at once in flats, or separate pots filled with a mixture of sand and peatmoss or leafmold. Set each so that the point on the rough tuber where growth is emerging is covered ½ inch. Put in a warm, light place and keep sand-peat mixture uniformly moist.

When the shoots reach 3 to 4 inches tall, they're ready for potting. Or, if all danger of frost is over, for planting directly in the soil.

Potted begonias are a delight to watch at this stage. The stems of many are covered with reddish hairs so bright that against the light the whole plant looks as though made from twig coral.

Transplanting. When setting the young plants in beds, note that the front of the plant, the face, will always be the side where the leaf tips point. For the best show, see that all your plants face you.

All moving should be done with the least possible shock to the roots. Have the soil in beds already made light and porous by mixing through it a large quantity of leafmold or fine-milled peat.

For potting soil, use one-half to two-thirds leafmold or peat and the rest sandy loam.

After plants are well started, give each one a small handful of fish or cottonseed meal. Work this well into the soil.

Staking. Because you'll get such luxuriant growth from well-handled begonia tubers, staking is important. Stakes should be set early—while a 12-inch stake is twice as high as the plant. Half-inch stakes split from cedar shingles or bamboo do better at holding heavy bloom stems up than small wire stakes do.

For the biggest flowers, only one stem should be allowed to develop from tubers 1½ inches or less. Tie with half-inch strips of soft, inconspicuously colored cloth, raffia, or a very soft cord. Knot this on stake first, then loosely about begonia stem about 5 inches from soil. Make another tie before flowers develop.

Watering. This is never a chore but needs to be carefully done. A very gentle overhead spray daily, or twice daily serves best.

Keep begonias sheltered from midday sun. A little sunlight morning and evening, especially if it could be called a dappled light, is good for them.

Slug bait. Except for breakage by wind and by dogs out of bounds, you will have little trouble with pests on your begonias. Except slugs. To be safe, buy a commercially made slug bait and place this under small wooden blocks close to your begonias.

Summer care. A loose mulch about an inch thick of litter-size peatmoss or coarse leafmold will help keep begonia soil cool and moist. It will also save splattering the flowers with the daily spray. Tuberous begonia flowers make gorgeous indoor decorations when cut. Support one to three on a couple of peony leaves for a colorful centerpiece. In all cases, avoid making open wounds on tuberous begonia stems. In cutting leaves or flowers, leave a bit of each flower or leaf stem attached to the main plant.

Winter storage. When the first frosts put an end to the great begonia show, withhold water until the stems and leaves dry. Potted plants may be carried indoors. Those in beds should be forked out and set in a tray to ripen off.

After stems have parted cleanly from the tubers, brush any remaining soil off, and store tubers in a cool, dry place until spring.

Or, for greater safety, store them in dry vermiculite in screw-top glass jars set in a cool spot (40 to 50 degrees).

Other types. With the exception of pruning, these growing directions apply to all tuberous begonias. The hanging type grown especially for baskets and porch and window boxes are not pruned to one stem. With these, the more stems to produce the flower clusters, the more handsome your baskets will be.

Companion plants. For contrast in size and color, set in the lovely, small blue lobelias, and pixie-like torenias or monkey flowers. Use tall ferns as a background. Then, for color anywhere in the shade—you'll find you can't beat begonias.

The diary of a plain dirt gardener

March 27 Back home after dark tonight. And was greeted by news. That pump man had come. He had pulled out our old pump which had served us for 21 years. Said it was worn out. David told him to go ahead and put in a new one. So he had. And bless my soul, we have water, plenty, more than we have had in years. Which is a blessing. But the bill will be mebbe $400 when it comes.

March 29 Ground dry, so began uncovering roses. Took the two-pronged weeding hoe and pulled away the soil I had heaped around

Ground dry, so I uncovered roses. Most of them are in good shape, but a few are dead as I expected the base of the canes last fall. Most of them are in good shape, though as expected, a few are dead. This job will take several days.

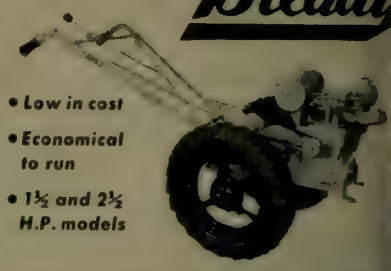
March 30 Man at the door this morning was the tree pruner for the power company. Our maple trees in front have grown to where they interfere with the wires. He wanted permission to cut back the trees. When he gets through, the trees will look like umbrellas. I don't like it, but what can one do?



March 31 This month has been devoted to upkeep and improved household efficiency. All I need now is for a rich uncle—at present unknown to us—to get home from Australia with a fortune. In the mail was a letter from the power company, saying Maggie had made a mistake and didn't send enough money for the bill the last time. One note of cheer is that the buds on our little magnolia are swelling.

News Notes: Among the new vegetables for 1949 is a Chinese cabbage, Michihili—pronounced Mich-hee-lee. This is similar to the older Chihili but is firmer, more sure-heading and more uniform. Ideal Snowball is a new cauliflower that stands both heat and freezing weather. And a new radish worth trying is Cherry Belle.

New annual flowers include: Spry Hybrids, a new hybrid strain of miniature marigolds; Eldorado, a dwarf French double marigold of canary-yellow color, which is a new shade in dwarfs; Midget Harmony, a dwarf form of the older favorite marigold, Harmony; and Snowball Improved petunia which is a lower growing, more compact Snowball. Cosmos Crimson Scarlet is new with crimson-scarlet flowers, fine for cutting, on 3-foot stems.

Growing hyacinths indoors

I want to start hyacinths indoors. I was told to pot bulbs in good soil with tops ½ inch below the surface and then place in a cool, dark place. But what's the next step after that? K. L. B.

Right now the needs of your hyacinths are coolness, darkness, and moisture. But when flower buds show as they do here, move plants into the light, but not sunshine. Keep them cool (less than 60 degrees) for another two days to adjust them to the change without any shock to the plants move the plants into sun- . Hyacinths, like most r bulbs used indoors, need ty of water so never let dry out. Your reward will loom like this; the flower ds may be so heavy that will need inconspicuous ng to hold them erect

Don't throw your hyacinths away after they are done flowering. Keep them growing until the danger of killing frost is past outdoors. Slip the ball of earth out of the pot undisturbed and plant in garden soil. Although the bulbs can't be forced again and are done flowering this season, they'll bloom outdoors next year

Q What's this talk about girdling roots? A tree expert called at my door last fall and told me my big elm was killing itself. B. H. C., New Jersey.

Girdling roots can choke off the movement of food and water in a tree. Cut off such roots as soon as you find them. Look for them in the top foot of soil near the trunk. Suspect their presence if your tree seems to grow poorly on one side or if the trunk has a flat place instead of the usual swelling at the ground line.

Q What is the best way to protect the trunk when you are making a fill near a big tree? I know I shouldn't let the dirt cover the trunk, but how can I avoid it? Y. U. L., California.

Corrugated metal tree wells are available now, 3 to 7 feet in diameter, 1 to 3 feet high. Or you can build a wall of brick or stone that will serve the same purpose.

Here are four rules to follow if you want to come up to tax-return time with a set of records that will save you money.

RULE 1.

Keep intelligible books. If you wait until the eleventh hour to make out your tax returns and try to do it without some kind of understandable records in front of you, you're apt to overlook or forget a lot of deductible items. To keep from forgetting, I keep an ordinary notebook at home, another in the glove compartment of my car, and another at the office. In these books I jot down all the items I think are deductible. And in listing the items, I'm not overly critical as to actual deductibility. If I think they may be deductible, I put them down. I can check their actual deductibility later. I always list the date of purchase and the amount paid and include items that are deductible on both state and federal tax returns.

RULE 2.

Check the books. At the time you prepare your return, you should compare your check stubs with your books to be sure you haven't overlooked anything. Then you should make a physical check by walking through the house (with your wife) from room to room, upstairs and in the basement, and even out in the garage, to refresh your memory on things you purchased during the year. Such a visual inventory will remind you of large purchases that involved sales tax and other items that are deductible.

Then sit down with a calendar and, again with your wife, check each month to be sure you haven't overlooked any trips that are deductible, gifts that are deductible, and other expenses that should be listed in your books.

RULE 3.

Keep up-to-date on what is deductible. Most bookstores have pamphlets containing a check list of deductible items. The list changes a little from year to year, so be sure you're working from one that's up-to-date. When you've finally prepared your tax return, read the allowable deduction list out loud. For instance, in considering medical expenses, the taxpayer should read out loud such items as "artificial teeth," "ambulance hire," "drug and medical supplies," "patent medicine," "vitamins," "prescriptions."

RULE 4.

Make expert use of an expert. When you've closed your books for the year and have filled in your return as best you can, you'll still be smart to take (1) your new return, (2) last year's return, (3) statements supplied by your employer, and (4) your books to the collector's office, (where services are free) or to an accountant or attorney. If you present an intelligible set of records, the expert can afford to charge you only a minimum fee. And because your pattern of living probably won't change too much from year to year, once the expert has set up a return for you, you will take less of his time in succeeding years.

The importance of using a deduction list such as we discussed under Rule 3 can hardly be overemphasized. There are many, many items that are deductible and are overlooked by taxpayers every year. Perhaps the main reason for this is that the deductibility of items is not based upon logic. Many things for which you can deduct appear to be items that "just shouldn't be deductible."

Did you know that even if it is entirely your fault (but not due to willful negligence) when you smash up your car and even though you were using it for pleasure, that your loss may be deductible?

Did you know that if you forget to drain the water out of the pipes in your home, and even though your home is not used in connection with your business, if those pipes freeze and burst, you can deduct that entire expense of repair?

Get a deduction list, check it carefully and often!

Your home. Taxwise it is cheaper to own your home than to rent one, so the alternative of buying may be preferred. If you rent your home, the rent is not deductible, but if you purchase your own home you may deduct both the taxes on the house and the interest paid in connection with the purchase. And what is perhaps more important and seldom recognized is that the equity in your home is receiving tax-free interest. This is because any rent you might have paid for a home would have had to include a fair return on the owner's investments.

Part of your home may also be used in connection with your business. If you have callers or clients coming to your home, then you can deduct a reasonable amount for the room that is used as an office, and you can also deduct a share of the heating bill, the water bill, and perhaps most of the telephone bill. If you sell your home for more than you paid for it, remember in determining the cost of the home to you, add the cost of all major improvements, and thus by increasing your cost you will reduce your total profit and as a consequence reduce the tax you must pay on that profit.

Your contributions. Don't forget to list any clothing you gave away to a recognized charity organization as well as any money you donated. The reasonable market value of the clothing is deductible as well as cash contributions. The list of organizations to which contributions can be made proves why you should read the deduction list out loud. It's easy to forget about the money you give to the Girl Scouts, the American Legion, or the Christmas Poor Fund because those gifts are often small. In the case of the last, it may be n tossed into a bucket on the s but if both you and your wife in a $1 you can, perhaps, sa cents by remembering tha made the contribution. In l charitable contributions, don get that the expense actuall curred in driving your car a for the church or for the Red or any other recognized orga tion is a deductible expens cents per mile is a fair estima

There is, of course, a lot of c information in a good income booklet. It should be read for purpose of picking up other gestions. Usually these are eas understand and easy to follow. instance, suppose you are plan to get married either at the en one year or the first of the year. A tax booklet should tell that if you get married on Dec ber 31 instead of say January 4, you will save hundreds of lars. This is because husbands wives get to split their incom the full year even though they married on its last day. On other hand, don't get divo until after December 31, bec if you and your wife are not married on the last day of a y you lose the entire year for poses of tax splitting.

So you can see that it is Uncle Sam who is "The M Man of March." More often the taxpayer himself.

The government only w what is due. With a little patie and a little reading, you can pr ably reduce your taxes and s real money.

As a taxpayer you may be y own worst enemy. Stop be tough on yourself—why not le the rules and follow them?

If you like to sit around the table ...nd talk after the meal is finished, ...llow the children to say, "Ex-...use me, please," and leave.

"Never say, 'I don't like that!'" From the beginning, teach your child to like what's on his plate. Teach him to say, "I'll have just a little, please," if he doesn't recognize what's served him. And then, after trying it, he may leave some if he doesn't like it. Now and then have a restaurant date with your children to make them familiar with eating out.

"Don't repeat what you hear at home." Teach Guy and Gretchen that it's a breach of family loyalty to repeat what they hear at home. And teach them not to be gossips!

"Invite your friends to come over." In grade school little girls begin to be clannish and snippy. See that some of Gretchen's friends are from outside of her circle and see that she is loyal to them.

Teen-age Tom and Trudy

"Keep your word!" Teach Tom from his first date that his word is good as gold. If a girl's mother asks him to bring the girl home by 12, it's up to him to be there on the stroke of midnight. If he makes a date with a girl, he must keep it unless he's sick. If your daughter has said yes to one date and another she likes better comes along, make her keep her first promise no matter how hard.

"Be prompt." If Trudy promises to be home at a certain time, see that she makes it a point of honor to come at that time. If she's to meet someone at an appointed time, she must be there.

"Table manners are easy." When your Tom takes a girl out to dinner for the first time, review him on knives, forks, and spoons—begin from the outside and work in. Be sure you have told him that he gives the order to the waiter for the young lady and himself.

After the girl has looked over the menu for a minute, Tom should say, "The baked fish looks nice. . ." or whatever fits the price he wants to pay. Then he mentions a few other items, making suggestions within his price range, without saying a word, of course, about money.

"Take special notice of older people." Teach your Tom or Trudy to speak the older person's name in greeting. For example, "Good morning, Mrs. Jones."

"Notice each one." When Trudy or Tom says hello to several guests, teach them to call each one by name. In telling them good-bye, say, "Good-bye, Nancy. Good-bye, Mrs. Hatch, Mr. Hatch. Good-bye, Jack."

"Be careful of a loose tongue and a loose pen." Teach Tom and Trudy to keep a tight hold on the loose pen and the loose tongue. It's easy to say you love someone under the influence of the moon or a song or the fact that you're lonesome. Don't.

"Never forget yourself." Good manners are based on the old rule: "Think of other people. Never forget yourself."

For Trudy especially

"The guest comes first." If your daughter invites a friend to spend the night, have her see beforehand that there is a clean towel ready and clean sheets on her bed. And and get what you've always wanted in table fashion ... style and quality ... to meet your fondest dreams ... fashioned with all the skill of the age-old art of silversmithing . . . to live . . . and to serve graciously through all of your years.

When your doctor says...

"You need more roughage in your diet"

Remember...

SUNSWEET Prunes
Provide Roughage
Without Roughness

The soft fruit cellulose of prunes provides food roughage in its natural and most valuable form . . . roughage without roughness.

Prunes also contain an extra "plus," which further aids regular habits in a natural way.

Your doctor knows what prunes do for you, and will often recommend them ahead of other fruits . . . for the special virtues they possess.

Good Eating, too...

Prunes are good eating . . . by the dishful cooked . . . by the handful raw! Especially SUNSWEET Prunes.

SUNSWEETS are tree-ripened, and the extra days of ripening in the sun add extra sweetness, extra flavor, and extra richness in the important vitamins, minerals, and other food values.

They're "Tenderized" for quick-cooking and better eating . . . sealed in FOIL for perfect protection . . . packed by the farmers who grow the fruit.

when the visit is over, the extra work is Trudy's, not yours.

"The guest who gets a second invitation." When Trudy is invited away for a visit, see that she goes with clean clothes, with a small gift for her hostess, and with these rules for behavior: Fit into the family routine. Don't ask for special favors. Keep your clothes picked up, your bed made. Offer to help with the dishes and in other ways that are apparent. And when you return home write your hostess a sincere "thank you" note within three days.

For Tom especially

"A gentlemen never needs to splurge." If Tom has little money to spend on girls, or even if he has a lot, teach him that money is not all-important. A gentleman never throws his weight around in cash. If he has little money, he faces the fact honestly and makes no bones about it. Tell him that when a teen-age gentleman leaves a tip on a dinner table, it's never more than the customary 10 percent.

"A girl judges you by the way you treat her mother and father." Of course, Tom is no apple polisher, but he does want to make the best possible impression on a girl's mother and father. Remind him now and then of these rules: Always stand when a lady is standing. Say "Sir" to an older man.

"Never ask a girl for a date more than three days ahead of time—unless it's for a prom." Teen-age love is a very up-and-down affair as you know. When Tom makes a date too far in advance, he finds sometimes it's hard to keep, especially if he has become tired of the girl in the meantime. But he will have to keep his word.

"See that you make the dates." Explain to Tom that when a girl talks about wanting to go someplace where he definitely doesn't want to go, he should keep quiet. She'll like him even better for not letting her use him. Then, soon after, he should invite her someplace he'd like to take her.

Didn't Have To Say It

Little Helen was returning from her first lunch at a friend's home. Anxious to know if she had maintained the family dignity, her mother questioned her concerning her behavior.

"I hope that you remembered to say 'No, thank you' and 'Yes, please,' " said the careful parent.

"I said 'Yes, please.' But I never had to say 'No, thank you.' "

"Why not?" demanded her mother.

"Because what they gave us was good old hot Grape-Nuts Wheat-Meal, and that's my very favorite cereal."

Home furnishings answers

Q. Our terrace is screened, roofed, furnished, and ready to serve as an outdoor living room, but the entrance to the terrace is through a disappointingly dull back hall. What can I do to brighten this plain, narrow entry? Mrs. C. G. L., Kalamazoo, Michigan.

A. Wallpaper is the best brightener and enlarger for you. Put a molding 30 inches above the baseboard and paint the wall below it. Then paper the ceiling and the walls above this dado with a gay printed paper. You may also paper three walls and the ceiling, and mirror one side to reflect the opposite wall—thus adding width to the hall.

Q. How can I get additional storage space without having to build in cupboards? Mrs. R. W. B., Albuquerque, New Mexico.

A. Choose a matching set of cupboards, chests, and shelves—they come in a variety of styles and finishes—and assemble them in one unit in otherwise wasted space. You can change the arrangement by just switching pieces.

Are you really a good listener?

By Marjorie Holmes

YEARS ago, to be a lively conversationalist was considered the key to social success. Later Dale Carnegie reminded us that it was even more important to be a good listener. After the publication of How to Win Friends and Influence People, it was amusing to watch former conversation monopolizers struggling to practice this alien art. By now nearly everyone assumes he's a good listener, without pausing to consider that there are fine points to the art of listening. Test yourself against the following situations, to discover just how good a listener you are. You may be surprised!

1. Someone has concluded a remark which does not particularly interest you. Do you—

a. Smile and say nothing?
b. Speak of some other subject?
c. Walk off?
d. Make some comment, if only, "Well—" or "I quite agree."

2. You have nothing else pressing to do, but you are bored by the long drawn-out story that is being told. Do you—

a. Find something to divert your attention, such as leafing through a magazine, until it's over?
b. Listen with apparent animation, smiling and nodding encouragement?
c. Break in when you can, and change the subject?
d. Invent some excuse for escape—such as the telephone, or a headache?

3. You are entertaining your child's teacher for the first time—or perhaps a new neighbor. The guest is quiet and self-conscious. Do you put him or her at ease by:

a. Talking about yourself or your family's activities?
b. Asking his views on politics, literature, or other general subjects?
c. Risk the possible dull shop talk by drawing him out about his work?

4. The person who is talking stops and gropes helplessly for a certain word. Do you—

a. Promptly furnish it for him?
b. Smile encouragingly and wait until he thinks of it?
c. Wait until you're sure he'd welcome help, then apologize and offer some suggestions?

5. A friend of yours is one of those rambling conversationalists who starts a good story, but follows half a dozen byways before getting back to it. Do you—

a. Sigh and exchange glances with your spouse?
b. Force your mind to tag cheerfully

our dog and mine

It's not fair to a dog to expose him to the whims of a youngster under 4

By Russell K. Lowry

How old should a child be before ening a dog?—G. M. C., Minneota.

A youngster should be at least years old before getting a dog. this age, a boy or girl is able to ntrol a puppy and avoid injury. young, lively puppy can harm small child, in innocent play. And nior can give the pup a bad ne, too.

My neighbor's dog barks incesntly. Can he be cured? Does this ean he is dangerous to children?—M. J. F., Pennsylvania.

The dog's master should correct spanking and scolding, using a ded newspaper and a firm "No-No!" Trick is to do this right in the idst of the barking, so that the nishment is associated with the arking in the dog's mind. Excesive barking is caused by boredom, esire for attention, passing strangrs, or other dogs. It is not necesarily an indication of viciousness.

Is there any cure for mange? My dog gets it every spring and nothing e've tried seems to help.—A. J. F., Kentucky.

Your dog has periodic or "summer" eczema, not mange. Underfed your dog by a good 25 percent and be firm about it. Feed 50 percent beef, horse meat, or canned dog food; 50 percent dog meal or kibbled dog biscuit. Mix and moisten with warm water or meat broth, adding one-half teaspoon of one of the vitamin and mineral supplements now on the market. Do not bathe your dog at all, but comb and brush him regularly. Get him outdoors all you can. The ailment is stubborn, but this treatment gets results.

My female dog's urine has ruined sections of my bentgrass lawn. What can I do about it?—Mrs. P. J. J., Illinois.

High acidity of many females' urine will burn spots in grass, leaving bare patches 8 to 10 inches in diameter. Only solution is to teach your dog to perform on a leash in a selected location, or confine her in a fenced enclosure.

My blonde cocker sheds terribly and has an odor which penetrates to every corner of the house. She is bathed often, even has deodorant powder used on her. What else can I do?—Mrs. E. T., Iowa.

Excessive bathing is most of your trouble. Just brush and comb your dog regularly. Feed 50 percent beef, horse meat, or canned dog

Something's Rotting Around Your Place!

CUPRINOL®

STOPS ROT AND TERMITES

Perhaps it's your window sills, screens, porch steps, fences. For rot and termites readily attack any exposed wood — rotted wood infects new boards — and the damage is usually not seen until the wood is eaten away within.

Whenever you build or repair, treat the wood with Cuprinol by brush, spray or dip. Cuprinol is the original Danish naphthenate preservative developed 40 years ago and used extensively throughout the world today. It has been tested in the laboratory and proven in the field.

Cuprinol is carried by lumber yards, hardware, paint and marine supply stores — qt. $1.45; gal. $3.90. If you cannot find it locally order direct. Postpaid on receipt of check or money order, or C.O.D. transportation extra.

food, 50 percent dog meal or kibbled dog biscuit. Mix and add meat broth. Also add ½ teaspoon of a vitamin and mineral supplement and ½ teaspoon of cod-liver oil. Give all the outdoor exercise you can. If you do these things, you won't notice any "doggy" odor.

Our dog has apparently been treated brutally by his former master. He cowers and shies away at the least sign of firmness, though we've never raised a finger against him. How can we bring back his spirit?—A. A. J., New York.

Win the dog's confidence by kindly treatment, lots of association with the family and good-natured play. Pat and praise him for any commendable conduct. He will regain spirit, but it takes time.

My "Smoky" keeps getting hookworms, though I have him wormed by a veterinarian every so often. What can I do to eliminate the worms for good?—G. E. W., Wisconsin.

Even when you get rid of hookworms, your dog can get them again if he runs around on infested ground. Hookworm eggs are eliminated in the feces, later hatch into larvae which find their way back into the dog by being picked up on the feet. Breeders and dog owners in the South sometimes have a hard time dealing with hookworm-infested soil because prolonged hot weather is ideal for propagation. They move kennels or quarters to a new location—or move family and dogs to another neighborhood. Sterilize hookworm-infested soil with strong salt brine, stirring common salt into boiling water, 1½ pounds to a gallon of water. Saturate soil's surface, using a pint to each square foot of ground. Intervals of treatment depend on amount and frequency of rainfall. Dog should be wormed at time of soil treatment.

Should I have my dog inoculated against distemper every year?—Mrs. J. P. M., Missouri.

Twice is plenty—once during puppyhood and again a year later. Greatest period of susceptibility is between 5 and 15 months, especially during teething. Dogs of 3 years or more are practically immune from distemper, though cases in older animals have been noted.

A Swiss inventor named Hans Laube has perfected a mechanism which has been nicknamed "smell-evision." If the process is ever adopted for general use, suitable odors will be released to accompany various scenes in motion pictures or television performances.

For example, if coffee is being consumed on the screen, the aroma of fresh mocha would permeate the theater. A scene depicting an auto race would produce the scent of authentic exhaust fumes.

Treat faulty diet—the real cause of much itching, sore skin, loss of coat. Canned, dried and heated foods often lose valuable "fresh" factors necessary to skin health. Rex Oil is 60% linoleic fat—the essential "skin vitamin." Just add a little to the daily food. See a much improved dog in three weeks or money back. At drug and pet stores or send $1.00 for two months supply to Rex Oil, Monticello 4, Illinois.

c. Deftly attempt to steer him to home base by an eager question now and then, such as—"Yes, but what happened to the fish?" or "I can't wait to hear what Mary said when you told her what was up—"

6. A guest begins to discuss something on which you happen to be better informed than he. Do you—

a. Announce your personal knowledge or experience in the subject and take over?

b. Say nothing of your own qualifications, but correct him on certain points as he is speaking?

c. Listen with interest, and make some comment to show that interest when he has finished, but fail to mention that you know even more about it?

d. Listen patiently; then smile and remark, "Yes, I know, I did research in that field myself for years."

7. You are with a group of people on whom you'd like to make an impression. A friend has the center of the floor, and all sorts of puns on his remarks keep occuring to you. Do you—

a. Resist the temptation to come out with them?

b. Demonstrate your wit and amuse the others by making them?

c. Whisper them to the person beside you?

8. A long-winded neighbor stops you on the back step, at a time when you have half a dozen things to do. Do you—

a. Secretly pray he'll go away and, listen politely?

b. Explain that you're awfully busy and just haven't time to visit this morning?

c. Slam the door in his face, since he's a bother, anyway?

d. Listen interestedly for a few minutes, then interrupt with, "I'm so sorry, Joe, but I'm awfully rushed. Will you excuse me this time and come over soon again?"

Here are your answers. Give yourself 12 points each time you can honestly take credit for a correct one. Ten, for the second choice. A score of 96 rates you not only a superb listener but a good psychologist. Ninety would be good. But if you score below 85—well, you're not as slick a listener as you may have thought.

1. (d). Definitely! More people are guilty of this subtle form of rudeness than they realize. But if you discover you're one of them, do hasten to make amends. It's such a squelched feeling, to have spoken and only be ignored.

2. (b). And try to be charitable about it. Remember, you may sometimes talk far too long without being aware of it, yourself.

3. (c). Shop talk isn't always dull. And to the person who's discussing his own work, it's invariably fascinating. (b) is a good second choice. Not safe and specific like a person's professional interests, but good.

4. (c) or (b). It's painful to watch anyone floundering for the word that's right there on tap for you. But it's downright discourteous to toss it glibly to him, unless he asks.

5. (c) or (b). In this case, an interruption, if tactfully spirited enough, will please the storyteller. People like to feel their listeners relish the tale enough to want to hear its outcome.

6. (c). You have to be both generous and possessed of will power not to steal a little thunder in situations like this, but you'll feel better for keeping mum. And you never gain, even in prestige, by deflating another.

7. (a). By precisely the same reasoning.

8. (d) or (b). Being a good listener should never supercede more vital matters. But if you master back-door technique you can take honors at both!

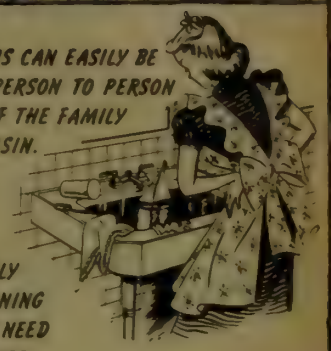
home again, will see Washington in flashbacks: The glowing rose window of the Washington Cathedral, and the spicy smells of the Bishop's Garden just outside . . . the marble waterfall in Meridian Park, astonishing duplicate of the one in the royal gardens at Caserta, Italy . . . the impressive homes on Embassy Row, and the Victorian homes of the "Cliff Dwellers," the original Washingtonians . . . the traffic wheeling around Dupont Circle, the fashionable center of the city.

Or the memory may be a phrase from John Wilkes Booth's diary: "After being hunted like a dog through swamps and woods, and last night being chased by gunboats until I was forced to return, wet, cold, and starving, with every man's hand against me, I am here . . . and why? For doing what Brutus was honored for . . . and yet, for striking down a greater tyrant than they ever knew, I am looked upon as a common cutthroat."



IT MAY be that someone's recollection will return to the long, flowing curves of the Mount Vernon Memorial Highway, with the pillars of Washington's home and the ivy of his mausoleum at the end of the trip . . . to the gleaming marble of the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier, where sentries pace ceaselessly, 24 hours a day . . . to the cobblestones of Georgetown . . . to the microscopes and fingerprints of the F.B.I. . . . to the glowing paintings in the National Gallery of Arts, or the tropical patio of the Pan-American Union.

For Washington is all things to all Americans—past, present, and future: a national capital, a place of pilgrimage, a place to remember. It is, in one, a shrine and a vacation center. It is a place to visit reverently, and to remember always.

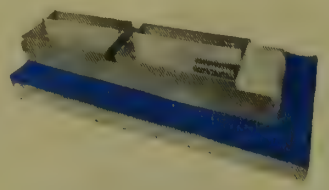
For Real Floor-to-Ceiling Comfort



Install a KAUSTINE Deluxe Winter Air Conditioner...

For junior playing on the floor, for baby tossed high in the air... sitting or standing—from floor to ceiling—it's a roomful of comfort in every room in the house with a Kaustine Winter Air Conditioner. What's more, there are no cold drafts—"Cold Seventies"* the engineers call it—with a Kaustine Furnace with the Airflo-meter. The rate of flow of heat from your registers is automatically controlled... a gentle breath when the thermostat turns the furnace on... a comfortable flood of warmth as it warms up... continuing after the furnace is turned off... diminishing as it cools. There are no blasts of partially heated air... for not only the heat but the speed of the air flow is automatically and accurately controlled.

What are the "Cold Seventies"? A fan test will show what happens when blowers in ordinary systems start. *The thermometer may read 70° but the sensation is that of cold.

TO SOLVE THIS PROBLEM The Kaustine Airflo-meter modulates the air flow, varying it according to the amount of heat it contains... to create a constant feeling of warm comfort.

Plastic kitchen stays fresh

THE counter surface here, called a laminated plastic, is often used now for counter and table tops in cafes because it needs no upkeep and comes clean and dry and polished with one swipe of a cloth. Alcohol, fruit acids, ammonia, insect sprays, and household cleaners don't stain it, but strong bleaching solutions will.

People who watch demonstrators show the stainproof qualities of plastics often show disbelief. "You have something besides water on that cloth," they charge. One plastics man tells that a little old lady challenged him when he was splashing a tablecloth with ink and wiping it clean with a sponge. So he wet his finger with his tongue and wiped the ink up to prove his point. Whereupon the woman demanded, "Young man, let me smell your breath."

Most of the materials we've shown are what's called "moderate in price," which means you wish you could find something

This flooring keeps its shine but needs no waxing and is nonskid. I costs about $2.50 a square yard. The blinds, made of very thin plastic strips, have no finish to peel, can be bent into a loop without cracking. And simply by unfastening the tilt cord you can slip them out of the ladder tape and dunk them in the bathtub for a thorough scrubbing

Some plastic wares are good, some bad; some set up standards peculiarly their own. The frosty bowl at lower right comes from a line of dishware that won't stand cigarettes or boiling water but won't break either. The bowl can be squeezed to form a pouring spout, has a cap which makes it airtight. Wives find that dish-wiping husbands can damage it only by persistent chewing. Bowl costs 35 cents, lid 20; plates cost 40 cheaper but probably can't. The kitchen curtains are about $1.35 a yard; the Venetian shades about $1 a square foot; the leatherlike upholstery in the living room and on the kitchen stools about a third as much as leather (about $30 for enough to cover a big wing chair like the green ones in the living room).

The rugs

But there's one price that makes you jump: the nylon rug in the hall on the cover costs some $55 a yard. It's a magnificently lush thing, and, if you've got that kind of money, worth it. The pile is an inch thick; you almost have to have snowshoes on to get through it. The manufacturer weaves the carpet to your individual order, any color you want, and preshrinks it to exact dimensions. You get a parchment certificate bearing your name as owner and signed by the company president (larger than any you can get by sending in box tops) which entitles you to return the carpet to the company for its first shampooing. On the basis of wear tests, the manufacturer believes the carpet will wear longer than forever. The United States Testing Company, one of those laboratories with machines to wear things out scientifically, ran tests on it, and though the conventional carpet used as a control was worn out after 75,000 revolutions, the nylon one was still going strong after 300,000, and the testing company wired the manufacturer that there was great need for the machine and would he just as soon discontinue the test so they could get on with their other work.

The living- and dining-room carpets shown are of synthetic yarn, too, but the price is $12.50, about that of good wool carpet. The yarn is a viscose rayon similar to that used in automobile tires. As in tires, it wears extremely well. The manufacturer is still experimenting with hard and soft yarns and doesn't know yet which he'll settle on. "The hardest wear best," he told us, "but the softest make up into a carpet that makes you want to take your shoes off and walk on it in your bare feet." We took our shoes off to try it, and our feet liked it fine. Like nylon, the rayon filaments are smooth, have no scales or corky fibers like wool or cotton, and are less inclined to hold dirt. But ink and grape juice and other stains don't wipe off either the nylon or rayon rugs as they do off the plasticised wallpaper. You mustn't expect it. These carpets are not an impervious sheet like the paper; they're made up of thousands of filaments like a wool carpet, and they definitely

Paneling in the den is laminated plastic like the kitchen counters. The top layer here is a veneer of real wood protected under a tough, clear layer of plastic. Although it's an expensive finish, it requires no upkeep, never needs refinishing, takes abuse like the kitchen counter will stain if they are abused. The manufacturer plans to open his own dye plant so he can give you any special color you want, at about 10 percent extra cost.

The lamp shades

If you've wondered about the lamp shades, all the white ones in the living room and hall are of plastic reinforced with spun-glass fibers. They wash easily in soap and water, and the manufacturer says they'll outlast any decorative scheme you put them into.

The glass fibers in the plastic bounce the light around as it comes through, so that the shade gives a soft, diffused light and has a frosted, mint-julep look. The plastic comes in a variety of colors. Some stores sell it in sheets so that you can make up your own shades. Already made-up shades cost all the way from 89 cents for little ones in chain stores up to $30 for big ones involving a lot of hand work. One caution: a shade is only as washable as the binding used in putting it together, so don't get one bound with silk and think it dunkable.

You could use most household cleaners on these shades and on a lot of the other plastics too, but manufacturers are wary of mentioning it. They don't trust you. Confides one: "Household cleaning solvents could be used, even gasoline, but these are not recommended openly, not because they would hurt the fabric but because of carelessness on the part of the user." Don't use abrasive cleaners on plastics either, nor bleaching solutions. And don't write on them with ball-point pens. The ink is an aniline dye and won't come off the way most inks will. To polish plastic dishes, if they're scratched and you feel you must, use toothpaste or a paste-type silver polish and rinse in warm, sudsy water. If you must iron a plastic, don't iron on the plastic itself; the iron may go right through. Use a damp cloth between the iron and plastic, as if you were pressing, and keep the iron's thermostat set as low as it'll go, for rayon. Cigarette burns on plastic floor tile will cause a temporary blemish, but you can rub it out with steel wool.

The wallpaper

Of all the plastics shown, the wallpaper probably takes the most abuse. Some patterns are quaint, some tapestrylike, but the colors are bold and fresh, and soap and water alone will remove most all stains. Sometimes you have to follow your suds with a light wiping with turpentine. We've smeared and splashed dozens of gooks on the paper to test it, and every one has washed off. You don't have to worry about rubbing through the surface; in laboratory tests the paper has withstood 25,000 consecutive rubs on the same spot. The paper comes 24 inches wide and in rolls 50 feet long. Prices range from 10 to 17½ cents a square foot, depending on the pattern. For close to two years now the covering has been used in the Kenosha (Wisconsin) General Hospital—in corridors, steam rooms, bathrooms and in entrance halls where carts

Leather and leatherlike upholstery usually have been limited to private clubs and men-of-distinction ads. But here you see that its plushy Union Club look isn't markedly foreign even to ivy and chintz at home and wheelchairs bump it. After a year of tests, the covering was used throughout the new wing built last July. In the old sterilizing rooms it was necessary to replaster the wall behind the sterilizers every three months. Now the upkeep has been cut down to a mere washing with soap and water when the walls become dirty.

RECENTLY an executive of the wallpaper company was at a party and found his hostess had used the plasticised paper because she liked the pattern but that she didn't know much about what it would do. So pretending hilarity the executive scribbled over the wall with lipstick, followed with pen and pencil, and added jam and bacon grease from the refrigerator. ("The look on my hostess' face when she saw it was one I shan't forget!") It looked like a joke out of hand. An embarrassed, sobering silence settled. "What have I done?" the guy cried. And then he got up and washed it all off. The whole stunt was such a success that now the hostess has made it one of her party tricks.

now. You can readily convert the rear bedroom on the first floor into a den or sewing room.

Though a rectangle is the least expensive shape for a house, it is often the least attractive. Breaking the kitchen beyond the rectangle and tacking on the garage give these houses a sense of breadth and size. Exterior materials—limestone for the walls, concrete block in the garage, and broad clapboards for gables—accentuate these dimensions.

In Five Star Home 1903A, for instance, the two-story end of the house faces the street to give the house bulk, and the garage and kitchen extend to one side to add breadth. In Five Star Home 1903B the feeling of size is given by adding an 8-foot porch and the garage to the long dimension of the house.

You may have heard that basementless houses are cold. Some are; but they needn't be. In these homes, the heating system is planned so that your floor is always dry and warm. Warm air circulates through the rooms, is taken back to the furnace through cold-air returns under the concrete slab floor.

Plans and Home Plan Book

Better Homes & Gardens Five Star Homes 1903A-1903B, in this issue, are two of the series of one- to four-bedroom homes which make up the Five Star Home Plan Service. These homes, designed by America's foremost architects, range in style from Cape Cod to Contemporary, Traditional to Ranch-type. These are homes planned to give you maximum comfort, convenience, and beauty—at minimum building cost. Better Homes & Gardens Five Star service includes:

- ★ Designs by skilled architects
- ★ Detailed working drawings
- ★ Cost-finding materials lists
- ★ Complete specifications
- ★ Contractor-owner agreements

Working Drawings are detailed architect's drawings, from which your builder or contractor will build your home. They are complete in every way. Cost is $5 per set. Included with each set of working drawings are: 1) specification form outlining the quality of materials and workmanship you'll want in order to insure sound construction; 2) contractor-owner agreement form—a suggested legal contract to assure your home will be built as specified.

Lists of Materials—priced at 10 cents—are available separately for each Five Star home. With this list, your architect, building materials dealer, or builder can compute in advance the building cost of your home in your community.

These complete home-planning aids may be purchased at firms listed above or ordered direct from Better Homes & Gardens, Des Moines 3, Iowa.

When mailing your order, be sure to specify the Five Star home number. Enclose a postal money order, bank draft, or check, payable to firm to which you write.

Home Plan Book: If you haven't selected a specific Five Star home plan as the home you want to build, Better Homes & Gardens new book, Five Star Homes, will help you make a choice. This 76-page book brings you photographs and floor plans of 66 Five Star homes. Price —50 cents. You can buy your copy at firms listed above or order direct from Better Homes & Gardens.

Shield your boy or girl from sorrow?

first encounter with real grief. The way he withstands the shock gives some indication of how he will bear up under a more major tragedy.

It's good to prepare your child for the loss of a pet while it's still well and a beloved companion. Tell him that animals age more rapidly than people, are susceptible to diseases that doctors can't always cure, and that they are apt to get run over or hurt in some way. Explain that it's natural for a pet to want freedom, even to wander away. If it dies, stress the joy and satisfaction it must have had in helping your child grow up. And as soon as you can, get another pet.

The grief of parting is most acute when a child has grown up with his pet. When a friend of mine had to have an old wire-haired terrier put away, she prepared her daughter this way: "Ruffy is going to a home for old dogs. He will have a jolly time with all the other old dogs, plenty to eat, freedom to run without danger, and the constant care of a dog doctor." The tears soon vanished.

Scandal. Because it comes usually like a bolt out of the blue, few people ever think about preparing their children for scandal.

The natural thing, but the very worst, is to criticize the offender, whether he or she is a member of the family or a close friend. Such talk makes reconciliation at a later date that much harder for the child.

A breakdown in morals should be treated as an illness. Assure the youngster that there is no more need to be ashamed than if the person concerned had a broken arm. Actually, you can explain, this is a dislocation, too, but of another kind. Advise pity and mercy. This will do much to counteract the bitterness, pain, and grief to which our children are often innocently subjected.

Inform them also that this is a test of right attitudes, of true friendship, and noble character. Comfort them with the knowledge that their genuine playmates will prove more loyal than ever.

Divorce. Divorce in the immediate family invariably affects a child. The tension produced is the most abrasive of all divorce effects, even though it is hard to measure and is cleverly concealed by some children.

Fourteen-year-old Don took his parents' separation very casually, even joked about reporting to "two headquarters from here on." "Don't worry about Don," his family remarked. "He is taking this thing in stride." How well in stride? Right now, he is a serious problem because of his defiant disregard for all authority.

Divorce is something that normally doesn't blow up all of a sudden. It is usually on the way for some time, and during that period there is a need for counseling to prevent strain. A child's grief over inability to change the situation, fear of insecurity, injury to pride, divided allegiance, and a feeling of having been let down provokes the sort of tension that hacks his emotions to pieces.

A child needs anchorage, whether he is 7 or 17. He needs to be assured devotion and material security. If anything, he needs more of it if his parents are having trouble. A child's pride can be preserved if Mom and Dad emphasize that their problem is not his fault and is beyond his control.

If one parent deserts or refuses to assume parental responsibility, fortify a child with the assurance that an aunt or an uncle or some friend will stand in for the defaulting parent. Take that person into your confidence first, then into that of your child.

Financial reverses. These have their effect on children, even though youngsters may be able to adjust more easily to them than adults. In times of inflation like the present, some mental preparation for the eventuality of a financial setback is advisable.

Some time ago a Princeton freshman received word that his father had been wiped out overnight. He was advised to come home when the term ended, three weeks from then. Shock, injured pride, despondency over the future, and broken morale might have made him give up and become a cynical, self-pitying drifter. Instead, he picked up enough jobs to get by, continued to maintain a high scholastic and athletic record.

His parents had known he would react just that way. They had stressed, as he was growing up, the thing every wise parent should recognize: That prosperity can never be assured. They had inspired courage in all of his little childhood disasters, taught that such personal assets as a capacity for friendship, industry, and the development of native ability would see him through.

But what if your child is oversensitive? More children are than is generally realized. But the problem can be resolved in the formative years a lot more easily than later. Unnecessary shielding will only make the conflict worse.

In place of delayed action and cover-up schemes, direct your child toward a happy acceptance of what life brings. You can do much to help convert sorrow and suffering into character.

THE MAN NEXT DOOR

Home life is an insidious force that in a few years can transform a grim paratrooper into a man who argues for hours about how long his daughter's bobbed hair should be.

"I'd certainly like to run my carving knife through another roast turkey," muses Les Gowan, reminiscently, chipping the ice off the mailbox. "But we're all such slaves of tradition that I might be thought un-American if I didn't wait till next Thanksgiving."

My neighbor who dwells in our neighborhood's first prefabricated house says his wife is a broad-minded woman. "She doesn't care how much I dance or flirt," he says, "with the homelier girls I knew before we were married."

I've begun to give our 9-year-old some boxing lessons at home. It's a lot safer to coach him in the manly art of self-defense than to risk a brisk, uncertain session with the father of one of his playmates.

After 19 years I've almost convinced my dream girl that I'd rather eat liver or meat loaf than expensive steaks. But she still orders a T-bone occasionally, probably just to impress the butcher.

Recently I voiced skepticism about the depth of our 15-year-old's devotion to his dream girl. He merely reminded me how I had once bragged about the supreme passion I felt, in the seventh grade, for the preacher's snub-nosed daughter with the freckles.

⬆Well, I've finally rearranged the furniture in my bedroom to give me enough space for setting-up exercises with my old army rifle before breakfast. But somehow my wife can streamline her figure better on a spot the size of a dime.

"If either of us were as much trouble as our new dog," reflects Phyllis Gowan, trying valiantly to deodorize the creature, "we'd probably end up in the divorce court."

You hear a lot about child-spacing nowadays. One thing that might mean is an arrangement that has your youngest child reaching 15 just when your first grandchild is about 3. Millions can't buy the joy and pleasure a child provides free or almost free.

Soon it'll be spring vacation, and maybe I'll catch a glimpse of our son and daughter in a week home from school. Especially if I remember to put the car in a downtown garage for repairs, disconnect the phone, and have the house quarantined.

To my slight chagrin, Junior has gone out not only for football, but also for wrestling at school, instead of tennis and squash. Even after I warned him, "Son, after you graduate you can't telephone somebody at 5 o'clock and invite 'em to wrestle!"

A genius admired by all the wives in the neighborhood ➡ is the handy-man-around-the-house who can install a new washer in a faucet with greater pride and gusto than his grandfather displayed in building a log cabin.

An average sleeper shifts his position 35 times every night, or about every 13 minutes. Maybe that accounts for the gradual decline of the double bed.

Some of my neighbors are nervous about world government; they're afraid we Americans might have to build a new modern house for every family on earth.

I try to sooth 'em with a reminder that even our own people haven't budged our own government much on housing.

After a glimpse of the campus trailer camps, the pretty coed in the next block wasn't quite so eager during the holidays to get married at the state university.

"I'm not the trailer type," she told her daddy, a big-hearted softy, half ready to subsidize the marriage.

My well-to-do neighbor in the house unpainted since 1941 boasts that his son away at college has quit telegraphing or phoning collect for more money.

"I soon put a stop to that," he says, "when I began to subtract the collect calls and wires from his allowance."

Don't throw away your marriage license: As long as it's more fun to bathe a baby than fill out your income-tax return. . . . While your own wife seems to remain forever the same age, though others grow older. . . . So long as sensible men yield to their wives in all the little arguments. . . . Until women stop telling their husbands they are smarter than the boss. . . . So long as the fireside glow can't be duplicated for under a million. . . . Until a genuine substitute is discovered to serve as a man's castle. . . . While it remains easier to love your own imps than somebody else's cherubs. . . . So long as the family home is the place where man's nerves unlax the quickest. . . . Until mankind learns to perpetuate the species some simpler way. . . . And until governments can devise a satisfactory substitute for family love and devotion.

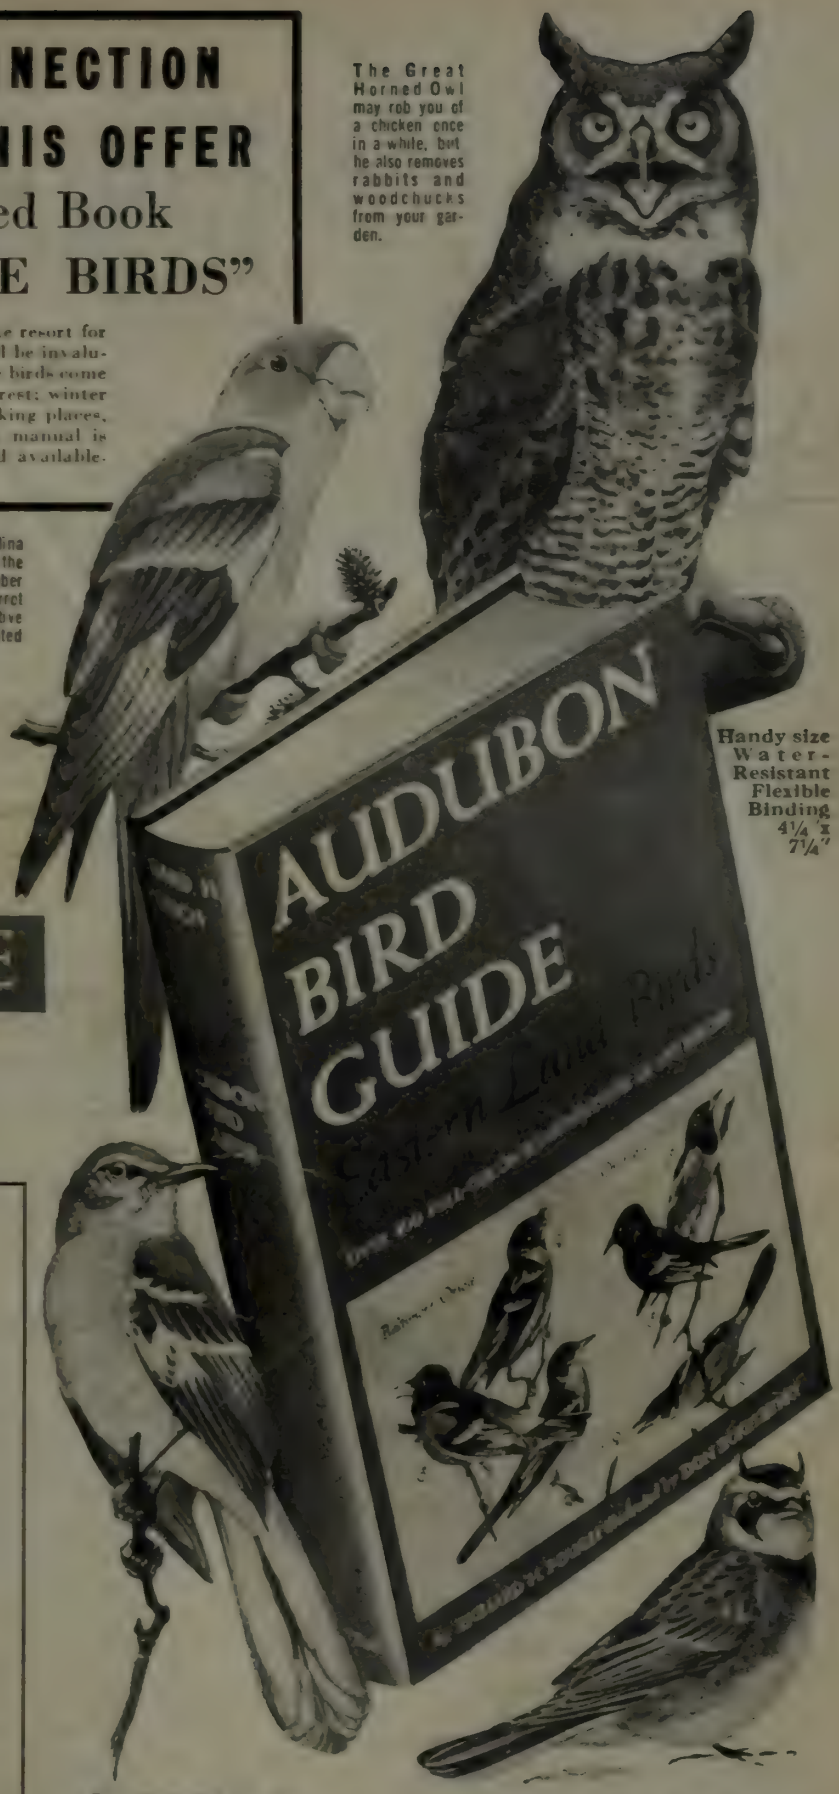
Did You Know—

That the beautiful songs of the breeding season are not love songs, but a proclamation of ownership and a warning to other males not to trespass?

That while the female Marsh-wren is building the actual nest, the male may build a half-dozen incomplete and apparently useless dummy nests?

That the habit of creeping head first down tree trunks distinguishes the nuthatches while the brown creepers spiral up the trunk and then drop to the base to repeat the process?

That ravens pair for life and use the same nest site year after year?



That the male Rose-breasted Grosbeak takes his turn sitting on the eggs and while doing so sings softly?

That the Cowbird lays its eggs in the nests of other birds and allows the foster parents to raise their young?

That the imitative ability of Mockingbirds often includes common sounds of their environment, from the squeak of a wheel to the bark of a dog?

These are just a few of the thousands of fascinating facts in the AUDUBON BIRD GUIDE.

The Great Horned Owl may rob you of a chicken once in a while, but he also removes rabbits and woodchucks from your garden.

The Mockingbird, in the Spring often sings through bright moonlight nights.

The Horned Lark nests so early that its first eggs are frequently destroyed by snow storms.

Photographs: Colonial Williamsburg; O'Halloran of Harris & Ewing

Colonial Williamsburg, as restored, is a flash back in good American living. Far better than the movies could do it for us in technicolor and sound, it revises all our thinking about what living was like for families of those days.

You find unexpected grandeur in the architecture, furniture, and fabrics—for Williamsburg was the cultural and political as well as economic capital of Virginia, most populous English-American colony, 250 years ago.

Beside the quaint shops and the small, snug houses with characteristic dormers, boxwood, flowering dogwoods, roses, and herbs make the gardens lovely again. It's a place you want to remember.

So, for souvenirs, what could we choose better than ideas to build into our own gardens?

A handsome trellis and arbor design. In this one every piece of wood counts, so much so that the roses and climbing honeysuckle are really extra trimmings. From the Bryan House garden

Close-cropped vines like this trumpet-creeper take the forbidding look from street fences. Branches bloom heavily, and are easily lifted when you paint. The Wythe House

As practical as they are good-looking are vegetable rows like these bordering a lawn. Long rows make cultivating with your wheel hoe easy. The Nancy Camp House

HOW A MAN OR WOMAN CAN RETIRE AT 55 ON $200 A MONTH

"LIFE looks mighty good to me today. I'm driving to Florida, maybe Mexico. I'm free to do the things I've always dreamed of doing—golf, fish, laze around a beach somewhere. For, you see, I'm retired now—with a check for $200 a month, every month, as long as I live.

"Strangely, I owe my luck to the crash and the depression. When the bottom dropped out of the market, I still had a good job, but my savings were wiped out.

"Up till then, I'd looked forward to having enough to retire on some day. But in '29, I was forty. With almost half my working years gone, I would have to start over again.

"And suppose I could save enough, how would I invest it? I'd already learned how little I knew about stocks.

"About that time, Jim Fisher, who worked in our office, announced he was retiring. I told him how I envied him—and how hopeless it seemed for me to ever afford to retire.

"But Jim said something that surprised me. 'You know, you're luckier than I am. You can retire—easier than I did. You can plan now to get a guaranteed income, with no investment worries, when you're, say, 55. For men in their forties—or younger—there's a modern answer to the retirement problem. You needn't be rich. You needn't have a lot of money saved.'

"I asked him what the answer was. He said, 'It's called the Phoenix Mutual Retirement Income Plan. It's a way you can make part of your salary now buy you a retirement income later. There's only one secret—starting in your forties—or sooner!

"I jotted the name on my calendar pad, and, after Jim left, I wrote to Phoenix Mutual. Back came a booklet telling all about Retirement Income Plans. This was the answer for me!

"Not long after that, I qualified for a Phoenix Mutual Plan. And what a feeling of security it gave me. It guaranteed $200 a month, every month, starting in 15 years. Meanwhile, till I reached retirement age, it protected my family with life insurance.

"Those fifteen years went mighty fast. A while back, I got my first Phoenix Mutual check and retired! Thanks to my Phoenix Mutual Plan, I have no money worries.

Aureomycin

it fights germs

By Lawrence Galton

Not just a hope for the future but available right now on your doctor's prescription, a powerful new drug promises to play a heroic role in the health of your family. Called aureomycin (aw-re-o-my-sin), it is one of the most versatile disease fighters yet discovered.

As this is written, the distinguished Dr. Perrin H. Long, of Johns Hopkins Medical School, the man who introduced sulfa drugs into this country, has announced: " 'Aureo' has filled in the gaps that penicillin did not hit. If we had never had penicillin, we would say that it is the most wonderful thing in the world."

Aureomycin is the first drug to knock out primary atypical—or, as it's commonly called, "virus"—pneumonia. It is the most effective weapon ever used against acute cases of undulant fever. It is potent against an entire group of diseases which previously resisted every chemical attack—dreaded, ailments such as typhus, Rocky Mountain spotted fever, Q fever, and Rickettsialpox. And preliminary reports on two cases at one famous medical clinic seem to indicate that aureomycin, given by mouth, may be effective in the early treatment of syphilis.

On top of all this, aureomycin has stepped in to work wonders for desperately ill people who couldn't tolerate penicillin, streptomycin or sulfa drugs. And it has proved effective against diseases which have developed resistance to them.

Right now, too, at least one project is getting under way to determine if aureomycin has any potential value against the common cold.

As if all this weren't enough, aureomycin doesn't have to be injected. It can be taken in capsules. Thus hospitalization frequently can be avoided or shortened.

If aureomycin did nothing more than attack "virus" pneumonia, it would be worth its weight in gold. Consider, for example, the woman with 104-degree temperature who was admitted to the Sinai Hospital in Baltimore not long ago.

Three days' treatment with massive doses of penicillin had not helped. No drug had ever cured this rarely fatal but costly, debilitating disease. If she had been stricken with "virus" pneumonia just a few months before, this woman could have looked forward to as much as a month of acute illness plus weeks, even months, of disability.

Yet, within 12 hours after she was given aureomycin, she improved markedly. Twelve hours later, her temperature was down to 99.8 degrees. She received aureomycin for three more days, four days later was discharged as well.

Two Johns Hopkins doctors reported on 15 severely ill patients ranging in age from 10 to 59. In

You can take this newest miracle drug by mouth—without shots and without bad reactions. It may speed your recovery and get you out of the hospital sooner. And it may open prospects for all-out war on viruses like colds and polio nine, temperature was normal within 24 hours; in two, within 48; in one, within three days. All got prompt relief from other symptoms; their lungs cleared rapidly.

No less dramatic and significant for every family is the effect of aureomycin on undulant fever. This is a most contagious disease that you get from infected cows, pigs, and goats through raw milk or raw-milk products and through fruits and vegetables contaminated by diseased animals. The fever comes and goes in waves, accompanied by headaches, aches and pains in back and bones, sleeplessness. Sometimes the long drawn-out disease is mistaken for malaria, tuberculosis, even nervous breakdown, and victims have been operated on for gall bladder trouble and appendicitis.

Until recently, the best treatment was a combination of streptomycin and sulfadiazine. Unfortunately, this doesn't always work. It requires long hospitalization and, in some victims, produces a severe reaction.

Aureomycin was tried at Johns Hopkins on a group of patients, including one who had not been cured by streptomycin-sulfadiazine treatment and another who had been treated ineffectually, not only with this combination but with other drugs as well. All of the patients responded quickly. Their temperatures fell to normal within three days and all symptoms finally disappeared. After two weeks of treatment, the patients were observed for from two to six months. All gained weight, and none showed a return of undulant fever.

Aureomycin was tried on some desperately ill patients in Mexico.

"Results far surpassed expectations," reported Dr. Wesley W. Spink, of the University of Minnesota, long a pioneer in undulant fever research. "Aureomycin, alone, in relatively small doses, given by mouth, altered the clinical course in a most dramatic way."

One of the happiest facts about aureomycin is its effectiveness against the Rickettsial diseases which have lately been increasing in incidence throughout the country. Rickettsiae, in case you aren't familiar with the term, are organisms midway between bacteria and viruses. They're responsible for Rocky Mountain spotted fever, a disease spread by ticks which, despite its name, occurs in every one of the 48 states. Q fever, another Rickettsial disease, which originated in Australia, has also been occuring here increasingly in recent years. There were epidemics of it in Texas and Chicago in 1946 and a raging outbreak in California in 1948. There are other Rickettsial diseases—typhus, psittacosis (parrot fever), and Rickettsialpox. Aureomycin has worked in all.

Recently, for example, a 4-year-old boy acutely ill with Rocky Mountain spotted fever was admitted to North Carolina Baptist Hospital with a seven-day history of high fever, headache, muscle pains, and a five-day-old rash.

What could be done for him? A drug called PABA (paramino benzoic acid) has been of some use, but usually it must be given befor the seventh day. Even then, while PABA has helped reduce the usual 10 percent death rate, it takes six days to reduce the fever, and an average of 12 days in the hospital. And it fails in almost one out of five tries to prevent severe complications such as pneumonia and infection of the heart muscle. Often, too, PABA has to be stopped because it damages the liver.

The North Carolina boy was given an aureomycin capsule once every six hours for four days. On the second day, he had already vastly improved. On the third, his rash had disappeared. One week after admission, he was well.

In a whole group of patients, treated at leading hospitals in Washington, D. C., Arlington, Virginia, and Cheverly and Baltimore, Maryland, aureomycin knocked out the fever in an average of 2⅓ days even when treatment couldn't be begun until the eighth day.

Even those who are most enthusiastic about aureomycin are not prepared, at this stage, to hope that it will be the last word, the panacea, for virus diseases. These ailments, ranging from the common cold to infantile paralysis, have resisted all previous chemical attack.

As already noted, aureomycin has worked in "virus" pneumonia. While this disease resembles, in many ways, the influenza known to be caused by viruses, no way has yet been found to isolate and definitely identify the agent that causes it. Researchers know it can't be bacterial because it slips through filters that ordinarily catch bacteria. It must, therefore, be smaller and could be a virus. But cautious medical men take nothing for granted.

There's hardly been time to test aureomycin thoroughly on other diseases believed to be virus-caused. However, five doctors recently reported in the Journal of the American Medical Association on their successful use of aureomycin in 25 cases of a venereal virus disease called lymphogranuloma venereum. Eight cases were particularly spectacular. The victims had greatly enlarged and tender glands in the groin. The tenderness was gone and the glands were back to normal size in just four days of treatment—"an event," the doctors declared, "which in our experience over 24 years with several hundred cases has never occured spontaneously within so short a time."

Here and there in the short time the drug has been available for general use, an individual doctor has tried it in a case or two of other virus diseases. One used it on his own wife who was in agony from shingles, a virus disease. In 12 hours, she was free of pain; in 24, her skin lesions began to dry up.

But it takes more than a single successful case, or even a few such cases, to warrant real hope. If your doctor isn't prepared, right now, to prescribe aureomycin as a sure cure for all virus diseases, don't be surprised. Much more testing remains to be done and it should be emphasized that, so far as is known, no tests have yet been made on polio and work on colds is only getting under way. The drug is still scarce in amount and must be used for serious conditions only until a greater supply is available.

But there are still other reasons for immediate enthusiasm. The new drug has produced no bad reactions. While some nausea has been reported, this can be readily controlled. And wherever used, even in 3-year-olds, for periods as long as 20 days, careful tests have revealed no urinary impairment, no jaundice or liver damage, no anemia. There have been no rash, hives, drug fever, vertigo.

Because of this, patients who can't tolerate penicillin, streptomycin, or sulfa drugs have been able to take aureomycin and be cured. There was, for example, the patient with subacute bacterial endocarditis (inflammation of the lining of the heart). Penicillin seemed to be doing a good job. Then came the toxic reactions: fever, hives, and arthritic symptoms so severe that the treatment had to be stopped. Aureomycin stepped in and, without penalty, is combating the disease.

Germs which aureomycin attacks have, so far, developed no resistance to it. Deliberate and repeated attempts to make them resistant have failed. That's important because an increasing tendency for germs to develop resistance to penicillin and other "wonder" drugs has been noted.

Notorious for developing resistance to penicillin, for instance, are the staphylococcus germs which commonly cause septicemia (blood poisoning) and osteomyelitis (bone inflammation) in children. Aureo has knocked them out.

Recently, two doctors at the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Columbia University reported on 100 cases of eye infections in which aureomycin, in solution form, was used. Many patients healed completely within the first 12 to 24 hours. Several were doctors with pink eye, who had come to think no drug would help them.

Aureomycin was discovered just two years ago by Dr. Benjamin M. Duggar, a 75-year-old microbiologist of Lederle Laboratories. Like penicillin and streptomycin, it was found in a mold.

To find it, Duggar worked patiently over 600 soil samples gathered from all over the United States—samples of plain agricultural soil, of swamp muck, delta silt, clay, humus. From each sample, molds were grown, tested against germ cultures and, if promising, tested further for toxic

What's the home-financing picture today?

By Harry Botsford and Arthur R. Lee

The answer, briefly, is that there is no shortage of money for home-financing. But you can expect interest rates to rise this year, perhaps ½ of 1 percent, and your application for a loan will be inspected more critically than similar requests made a year ago, or two years ago.

The current situation is this: Lending agencies have loaned millions of dollars at a fixed rate of interest—much of it on a long-term basis. At the same time, prices are rising. That means that the lending agencies' income from interest is being kept stable, while their cost of doing business is continuing to increase.

Three results are expected from this:

1. Property will be more carefully appraised, in contrast to the immediate past, when too many houses were optimistically valued.

2. Your background will be examined very closely: Lending agencies want to be sure you are both willing and able to meet the terms of your agreement. In fact, some lenders are examining applicants so closely they regard the house mortgaged more as collateral than as security for the loan.

3. Interest rates probably will increase in the near future; they're rising now in some regions. Many lenders describe loans at 4 percent as a thing of the past, with a few exceptions. Although loans are being made at 4½ percent, they are carefully screened, and increasing emphasis is being placed on federal mortgage insurance for loans carrying that interest rate. In some areas, at least, an increase to 5 per cent interest is expected. Spokesmen for lending agencies emphasize that higher interest rates will take mortgage loans out of competition with less troublesome investments, such as bonds, and make them more attractive.

You can directly benefit from one element of the current financial picture—the abundance of money available for loans. The heavy call for home-financing money the past two or three years has left some lending institutions committed nearly to the limit on that type of loan. But despite the heavy lending, the opinion is generally expressed that there is enough money available to take care of foreseeable home loans: There still is competition for the privilege of lending you money. So it's to your immediate advantage to shop for your home-building or home-buying money as carefully as you shop for groceries.

A good place to start your shopping is a savings bank, a commercial bank, or a trust company. They are limited in the proportion of

You'll be a good risk—if:

When you apply for a loan, lenders say your application will be more welcome if you:

- Are 30 to 45 years old (mature, still on the upgrade).
- Are the father of two or three children (better still, your children are educated).
- Are well established in your business, have opportunities for advancement (best, an executive; least desirable, a drifter).
- Own your furniture and car (lenders fear extra monthly payments will make too big a dent in your income).
- Are established in your community.
- Have outside investments, insurance.

BEST RISK—A substantial citizen expanding into his dream home.

savings deposits which legally may be loaned on home mortgages. So if they reject your loan, it's not necessarily a reflection on your integrity. The bank may have reached the limit of its home loans. Many take a critical view of projecting into an uncertain future loans carrying a fixed rate of interest. They point out that when interest rates are in the lower brackets (4 percent) the servicing costs reduce the net return on direct-reduction mortgages to a point where it approximates the revenue from corporate or government bonds. Should interest rates swing upward it is likely that banks and trust companies may be more eager to loan money on small home mortgages. However, many banks now welcome small home loans.

From your banker, you can find out if insurance companies—another source of money for home-financing—have loan offices in your city. Some insurance companies make loans through their local selling agencies, or district loan offices, others work with mortgage firms they list as correspondents. However, some insurance companies prefer to buy mortgages in blocks, such as those from a large building project.

Savings and loan associations will be other stopping points on your shopping trip: throughout the 1940's they have supplied about 32 percent of the total money that has gone into homeowners' hands for home-buying, building, and alterations. Most of their loans go into newly constructed homes priced between $4,000 and $10,000. Their new loans to homeowners now range from $300,000,000 to $350,000,000 each month. That is nearly double the amount of credit they were supplying in any of the war years and three times their prewar monthly average. Their average loan in 1948 was $4,725, compared with about $3,500 three years before.

There are two types of savings and loan associations—those operating under state charters, and those holding federal charters. Federal savings and loan associations are members of the Federal Home Loan Bank, and as such are eligible for savings insurance, similar to that offered banks by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

In common with other lending agencies, building and loan associations now are very selective in their risk-taking. They now require minimum down payments of about 35 percent. This, they point out, lowers the monthly payments and generally makes it possible to get the home debt-free sooner. In all lending agencies, the relation of your income to home cost and your prospects of continuous employment are carefully considered. In spite of this close selection, savings and loan associations currently are adding about 880,000 new homeowners a year to their lists, supplying credit for building, buying, or modernizing homes.

Agencies of the federal government are another important element of the home-financing picture, although they do not lend money or construct homes. They are, basically, sources of loan insurance, guaranteeing to the lender that his loan will be repaid.

One of them, the Federal Housing Administration, was created to encourage improvement of housing standards and conditions, and as a help in the creation of a sound mortgage market. It insures mortgage loans made by private lending agencies for the construction of residential property, and it insures financial institutions against loss on loans made to finance alterations, repairs, or improvements of homes and other property.

In the past 14 years F.H.A. has insured 1,800,000 small-home loans, averaging about $5,000. (You'll find tables showing types of F.H.A. loans on page 122.)

If you're an ex-G.I., you may want help from another federal agency, the Veterans Administration, which also guarantees home loans. Since its system of home-financing was launched in 1945, the V.A. has approved nearly 1,300,000 home loans. Recently, the agency's volume has dropped off substantially. In 1947, G.I. loans comprised almost one-third

We asked a group of America's most skillful, practical architects to design a series of quality homes at common-sense cost. They were given free rein with just one important restriction: These homes must embody the proven basic principles of efficiency and economy in design and construction.

Through such advancements as improved planning that saves building time and work . . . use of quality materials that perform two or more functions at a single cost . . . use of standard lumber and millwork sizes, these homes assure you that none of your money will go into needless frills or extravagances. They give you assurance that you can start right now to build a substantial, beautiful home that you will cherish all through life—at a price within the means of an average family.

To give the Celotex Three-Key Plan added interest to the homemaker, we have retained Helen Koues, nationally famous decorator, founder and for many years the director of Good Housekeeping Magazine's Studio of Architecture, Building and Furnishing. She shows with simple sketches how the interiors of these homes can be treated. She has provided arrangements and color scheme suggestions of modern charm and good taste, planned with efficiency and economy uppermost in mind.

Johnny can drink from a man-sized cup now. But he started with sips from a tiny glass

When baby switches to a cup

Even if you're ready to throw away his bottles or call it a day with breast-feeding, maybe your baby isn't. Here's how you can help him like it

By Ann Usher

Introducing your baby to milk from a cup should start as a game. And this experience should come long before you expect him to make the complete change-over from bottle or breast to cup.

The time when your baby will be ready to adopt the grownup method of taking liquids depends on his own inclinations. Weaning should never be forced.

But milk in a cup need not come as a total surprise at weaning time. If you wait until your baby is 9 or 10 months old to introduce him to a cup, he's likely to reject the whole idea indignantly.

At 5 months, when he's inclined to take a try at anything you offer him, let him know that milk does not come exclusively from his beloved bottle or from Mother.

One sip from a tiny cup or narrow-mouthed glass offered occasionally is enough to start with. You're not trying to wean him. Baby needs the satisfaction of sucking until he indicates willingness to give it up.

In the meantime, he's learning to master drinking from a cup by having his fruit juices and water that way. However, the fact that he'll drink juices from a cup doesn't guarantee that he'll accept milk in the same fashion later on. He should get used to occasional sips of milk while he is learning the process.

When your breast- or bottle-fed baby begins to show impatience at being held in your arms to nurse, start increasing the number of sips of milk from the cup and cut down the bottle or breast milk accordingly. Continue doing this until you can eliminate his bottle or nursing entirely at one meal—usually at noontime. However, if he likes his lunch bottle but shows little interest in nursing at another time, cut out the one he doesn't care about.

Follow this method until [Turn to page 105

HINTS ON COOKING VEAL CHOPS

IT'S ECONOMICAL as well as delicious to stuff veal chops. With a sharp paring knife, cut a deep, wide slit in the fat side of loin chops. Fill with your favorite bread or fruit dressing. Fasten with toothpicks or skewers.

TO FLOUR CHOPS QUICKLY, try this trick: Toss them, one at a time, in a paper bag in which you've placed flour and seasonings. For breaded chops, toss in sifted, seasoned crumbs, dip in slightly beaten egg, toss in sifted crumbs again.

BRAISING BRINGS OUT THE BEST in veal chops: After chops are coated, brown them in hot fat. Add about ¼ cup hot water (try such variations as apple or tomato juice, sour cream, or diluted mushroom or celery soup). Cover; cook slowly until tender—about 1 hour—on top of range or in mod. (350°F.) oven. Add more liquid sparingly, as needed. Hot stuffed olives make an interesting garnish.

Here's a pretty way *to perk up your table... and mealtime spirits, too. Do it with Knowles new, fresh-as-spring Buttercup pattern shown here. Its gay yellows, fresh greens and whisper-soft grays will make it right-at-home in your home. Cost? Averages about 50 cents per piece! Buttercup comes in services for twelve, eight, six, starter sets for four and in open stock. Spark up your dressing table

It's the flair, the touch of vivid color that gives a dressing table personality

By Pauline Graves

Before Whose dressing table is this? It might be almost anyone's—it's that impersonal-looking. Without a skirt on the table or curtains at the window, the nook looks drab and has no character or spark of personality.

Maynard L. Parker

After With a colored skirt and vivid wallpaper, the same dressing table has lots of charm. Tightly gathered glass curtains keep the nook private, but let in the sun. Pleated skirt fits snug to the table. Matching pleats at the top of the alcove show off scalloped cornice

Spring hints for the handy man

Preheat calking compound. Before you start calking cracks in masonry or stucco, lay the calking gun in a container of hot water for a few minutes, or wrap it with an electric heating pad as shown here. This softens the compound so you can easily force it into hairline cracks

the latest in garden news reported by Dr. R. Milton Carleton

New product deadlier than DDT

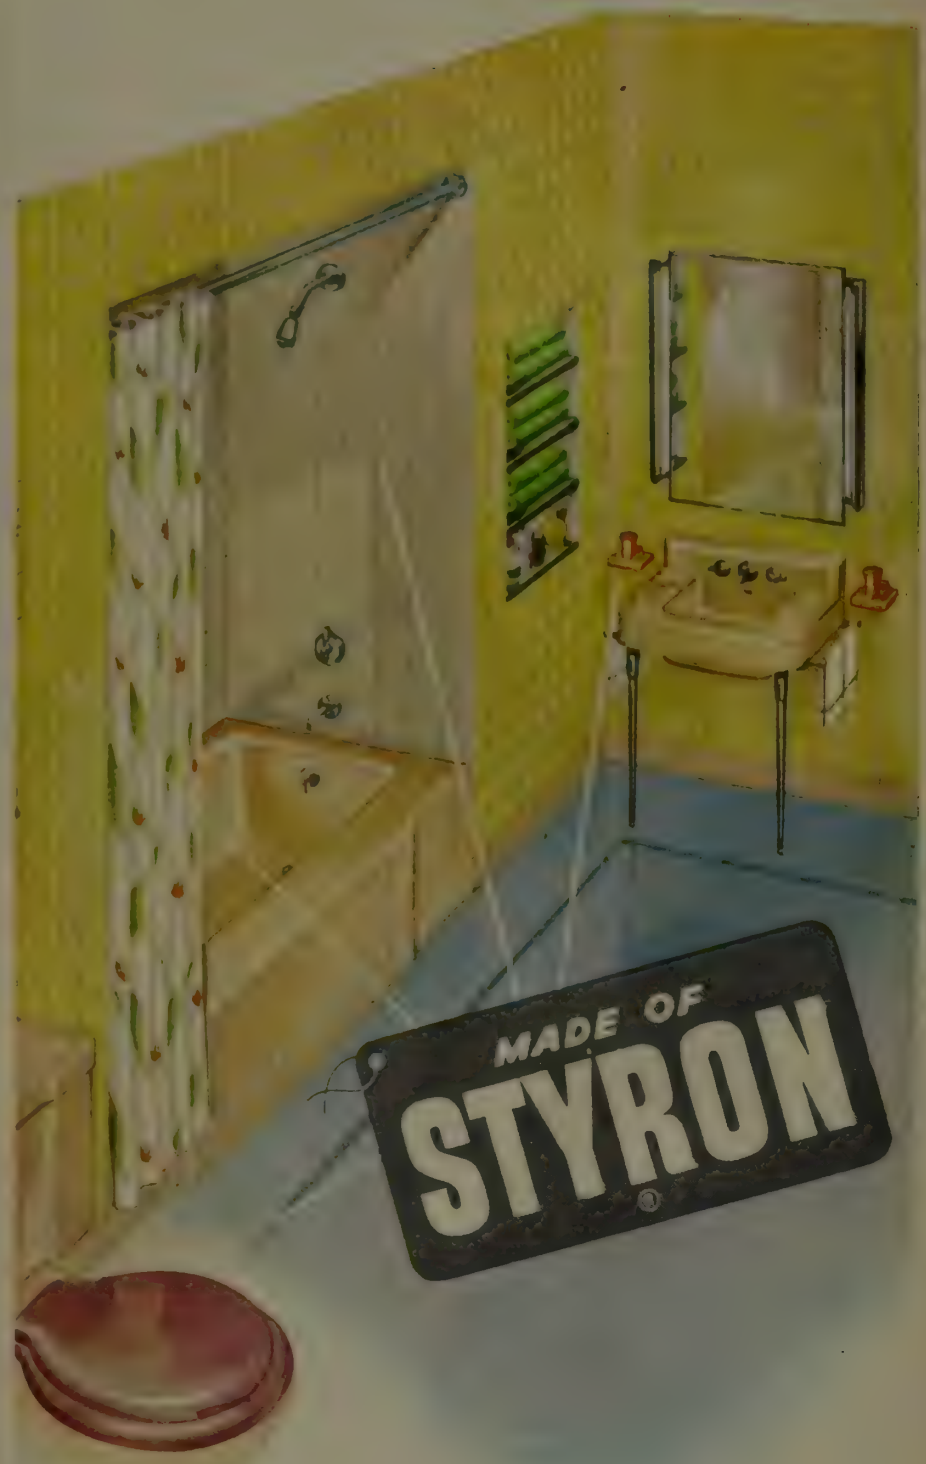
Perhaps not this year, but next, an amazing new insecticide will go on sale for use in home gardens. This is parathion, which as a pest killer is 125 times as toxic as the older "wonder insecticide" DDT. Mealy bugs, sow bugs, redspider-mites, practically all other mites, aphids, leaf rollers, cockroaches—in fact every known economic insect seems to be quickly killed by parathion. Two exceptions are the hard forms of scale (it kills soft forms) and the common slug.

So far, health authorities have been reluctant to release it to home gardeners until safe methods of handling have been worked out. For the time, parathion is being sold to greenhouse operators and orchardists accustomed to handling poisonous materials. But by next year I hope all of us can be using compounds of it safely by donning simple dust masks or respirators.

Like a florist's spray

There's a new white rose coming on the market that grows exactly as though a florist arranged it. Bred by Dr. L. E. Longley of the University of Minnesota, it is very hardy and makes a strong horizontal growth. It's a beautiful thing, better than any creeper I've seen to date, including the very excellent Creeping Everbloom of Brownell's. This new one looks as though you'd studded a deep green background with white gardenias. Though it can be trained as a pillar, it does not bloom so freely in that form. Doctor Longley has turned all stock over to a Minnesota nurseryman for propagating and distribution.

Pelleted seeds suffer in dry soil



They suffer more than non-pelleted seeds do. This recently determined fact explains the conflicting reports by early users so enthusiastic over the convenience of handling coated seeds. Pelleted seeds are seeds coated with a material containing plant food, hormones, and fungus killers. Tomatoes are the most successful, lettuce the least successful when pelleted.

Squash resists

Three years of observation have convinced me that the vines of the Butternut Squash are for all practical purposes borer-proof. I have never seen a borer in a Butternut vine, even when the vines of other squash varieties in nearby tests were heavily infested. Besides being resistant to borers, Butternut bears heavily. And on quality, is, or comes close to being, the best squash in the world. A rival in northern gardens is the Minnesota-bred Buttercup of which Greengold is a fine new strain.

"Your mother and I couldn't have built like this"

"WE BUILT about as well as we could . . . used the best materials that were available in those days but our old house just can't compare with what you and Steve are going to have here. Just take that Armstrong's Temlok®. We had to use plain wood sheathing. There wasn't any choice in those days. Your house is stronger, and it'll be a lot easier to heat. There's sure been a lot of progress in building methods in the last few years."

Yes, Armstrong's Temlok Sheathing represents a big advancement toward building better homes. Yet, it usually costs less than ordinary wood. In addition, Temlok saves a lot of money on labor costs. The big, lightweight fiberboard sheets are quickly cut and nailed in place. There's almost no waste of material.

Temlok Sheathing is a strong building material and a good insulation, too. It's made of millions of wood fibers, all tightly locked together to form a rigid board. When it's nailed to the framework of a house, it braces the whole structure, keeps it firm and rigid for the lifetime of the house. Each tough fiber is encased in asphalt that helps bind it to its neighbors and gives Temlok unusually high resistance to moisture. Less moisture means more comfort inside the house and longer life for the walls.

Expensive heat can't leak away through walls of Temlok. Tiny still-air spaces between its fibers act as a barrier that won't let heat pass into or out of the house. That's why Temlok helps to cut your fuel bills every winter and helps to keep the house more comfortable in summer.

Before you build, be sure to ask your lumber dealer for the details about Armstrong's Temlok Sheathing, the material that adds extra strength and insulation, too.

ARMSTRONG'S TEMLOK

One of the building materials made by the makers of Armstrong's Linoleum

I hated housework till . . .

I found the hidden me that wasn't fulfilled by running a home. As a child, I had fun because I hadn't yet become a specialist. I wrote stories, painted, played baseball, did whatever I had an urge to do. When I became a homemaker, I let housework take up most all my time and soon began to hate it. The many-sided child in me, the hidden me, gasped with boredom.

Some friends of mine pointed the way. In the middle of spring cleaning, Mary took time out to attend an art class an hour a day. It gave her creative side an outlet and she didn't resent the routine in her life so much. So I sat down one day when housework galled me more than usual and started writing a story. Now I earn my pin money by selling the things I write in the hour a day I allow myself. And I no longer hate housework, because it doesn't smother my hidden creative self any more.—Frances Fowler Allen, Springfield, Illinois.

I rearranged my house for greater working ease—and found uncluttered organization and convenient arrangement made keeping house much easier and more pleasant. My kitchen got the greatest overhauling. I rearranged until commonly used utensils and supplies are within easy reach of where they're needed, and seldom-used items are on upper or out-of-the-way shelves.

I even revamped my meal plans to dispense with many time-consuming dishes and to include more quick dishes made with prepared mixes and canned and frozen foods. —Mrs. James C. Wyman, Minneapolis.

How the low-built Hudson sets the pace in motor-car design

The modern design for '49

You can hear it in university laboratories—in industry engineering departments—around automotive testing grounds!

Yes, science has discovered, and now the whole world knows, that the lower to the ground a car can be built, the more graceful its lines can be made, the better it will perform and ride, the more surely it will handle and the safer it will be!

YET WHENEVER the industry has tried to approach the ideal in a low-built car, without lowering the interior floor, it has been necessary to keep top lines high to preserve inside head room, or reduce inside roominess to get top lines down—depriving driver and passengers of important advantages in either case.

But now you are invited to see and ride in the lowest-built car on the highway—the amazing New Hudson that, because of its recessed floors, asks neither driver nor passengers to give up anything! On the contrary, this car gives more of all the most-wanted things in motoring!

You'll see that this near miracle is accomplished because Hudson is the only car you step down into, which permits lounge-size seats to be moved down to harmonize with the new, lower top. You'll find that, as a result, Hudson, which is just five feet from ground to top, provides more interior head room than any mass-produced car built today—and still maintains ample road clearance!*

You'll quickly note that Hudson has authentic, low-built beauty because the "step-down" principle is so basically right it frees designers of the need for makeshift styling, enables Hudson to achieve pleasing proportions and symmetric, free-flowing lines that set a new standard for motor-car beauty.

As you take the wheel, you'll sense that Hudson's great power plant gets every chance to perform at its brilliant best; because this car is the lowest built, most streamlined of them all —the modern design for '49!

You'll find that, with the lowest center of gravity in any American stock car, Hudson provides a smooth, steady, hug-the-road way of going over all kinds of surfaces, especially on curves, that gives you a world of assurance—a feeling of safety beyond anything you've known before!

The nearest Hudson dealer is ready now to show you the automobile that is so far ahead it is a protected investment in motor-car value. Won't you visit him soon? Hudson Motor Car Company, Detroit 14.

In April 1948 the United States Senate passed the Federal Aid to Education Bill. That bill—if it had passed the House—would have granted $300,000,000 a year to the states to help grade and high schools. Each state was to receive $5 a year for each child between 5 and 17: and the rest—about $250,000,000—was to go largely to the below-standard schools of the poorer states.

But the House did not act. In January this year the legislation was re-introduced. President Truman demanded its enactment.

Two other pieces of school legislation have been readied for Congress. One would set up college scholarships, the other provide federal money for constructing grade and high schools, possibly for college buildings.

What do these things mean to you and your children? The question is so vital that we have asked Ellis Arnall, former governor of Georgia, and Samuel N. Stevens, president of Grinnell College, to answer.

THAT $300,000,000 GIFT TO OUR SCHOOLS . . .

. . . it means the end of our educational slums

Says Ellis Arnall

The schools belong to children. There are 28 million boys and girls of school age in the United States. Some of them have the advantages of fine buildings, adequate libraries, carefully tended playgrounds, and wholly competent teachers. Most of them do not. Perhaps your children are among the latter.

Five days each week, for more than three-quarters of the year, millions of American children go to school in slums. Their homes may be attractive, but the places where they spend many of their waking, formative hours deserve the phrase a child recently used in my presence: "I don't like to go to that dump!"

We are disseminating illiteracy all over the nation. Americans have a right to travel freely about their country, seeking the kind of place that they want for a home. They are entitled to good schools wherever they live.

The aim of federal aid to education is to make it possible for your child, for every child to have a high-school education in a good school.

Washington and the debates of the United States Senate may be a long way from the school where your child spends five days each week, September until June. They may be a long way from your community. But the decisions made there decide the kind of neighbors you have and the kind of playmates your children have [Turn to page 303

. . . the beginning of federal control of American thought

Says Samuel N. Stevens

I do not argue against use of federal funds under state control for elementary education, which is the purport of the Thomas Bill.

America has had a profound conviction that knowledge was the sure highway to a good life; that without universal education there could be no enlightened citizenship, no democratic society, and no American dream.

Most of us believe there should be equal educational opportunity for all boys and girls regardless of where they live, their color, their religion, or their economic condition.

But how should such educational opportunity be equally distributed and under whose direction?

There is a most vociferous group who look to the federal government. With them the Thomas Bill is not the end. They agitate for the federal government to enter directly into the field of education and to assume responsibilities for the intellectual development of youth from kindergarten through the university.

The federal government must not be permitted to enter directly into the management of our educational system. If there were no other way of achieving equality of educational opportunity, I would rather forego equality than to attain it at such a price. Traditional social and political values are always in jeopardy when a [Turn to page 200

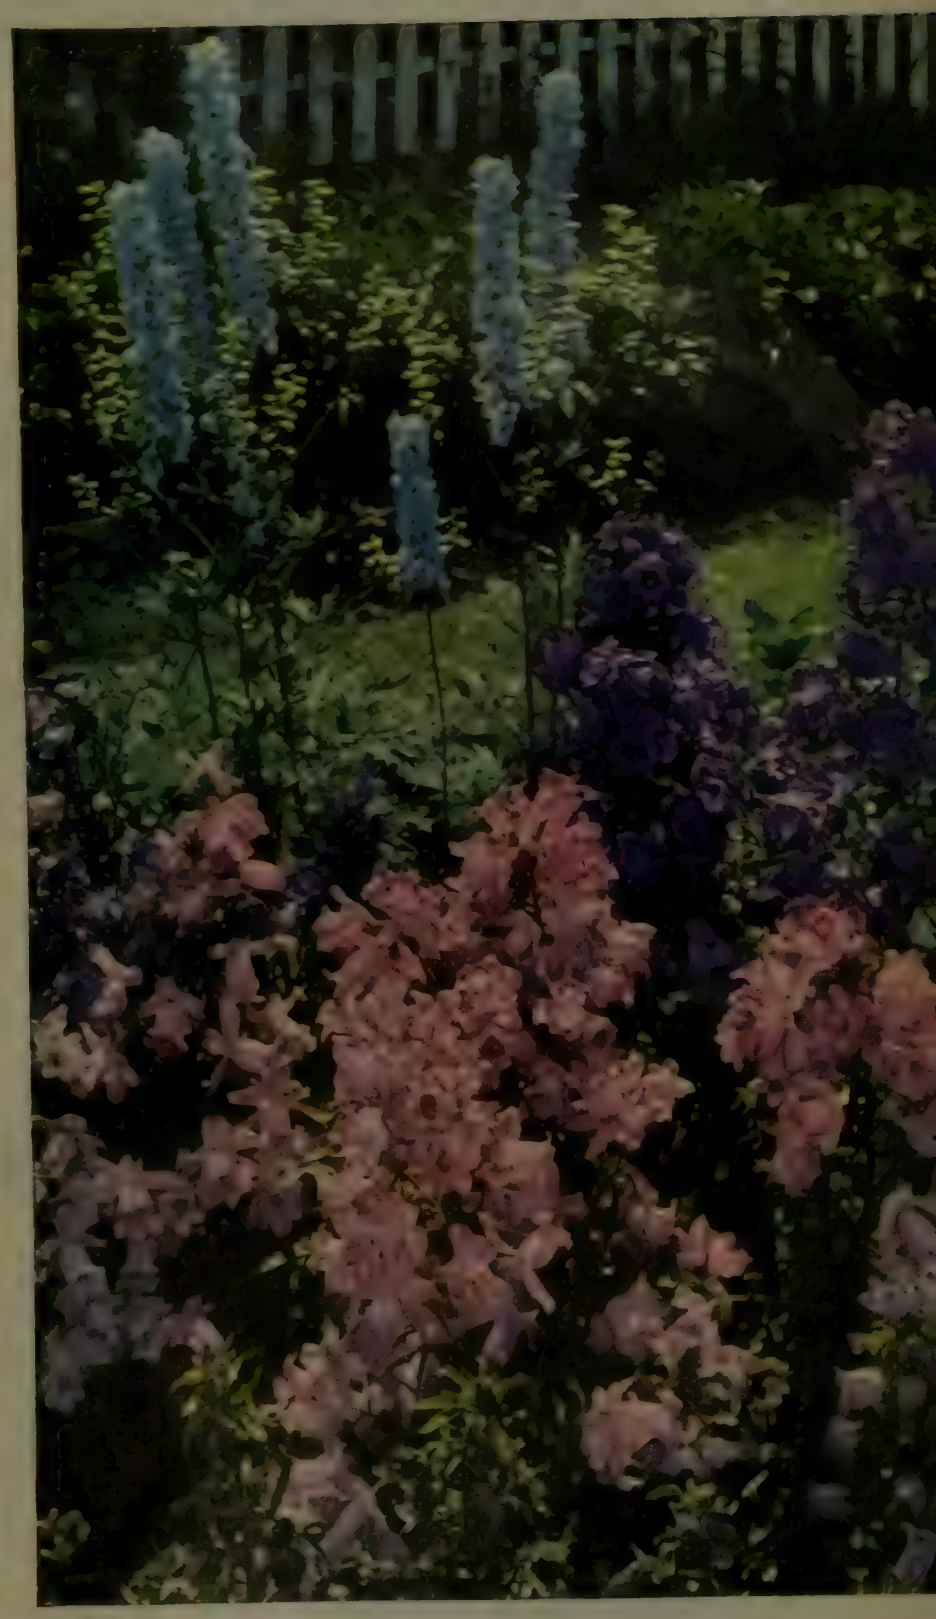
White adds zest to reds and yellows

Crimson peonies with white and gold iris will give you a great blaze of satisfying color through late May and early June. If to be looked at from distances of over 50 feet, set enough of each iris variety to make a clump of solid color 30 inches across. Unveined whites and yellows give best landscape effects. Two Felix Crousse peonies spaced 36 inches apart at the start splash the red into this northern Illinois border.

Brilliant blues team with reddest roses

Here's how to group some of your finest perennial flowers for mid-June. Set red roses, hybrid teas or floribundas, in front of your best delphiniums. Or move in the delphiniums if your roses are already established. Note how they compliment each other in height, too. For a foreground nothing could be prettier than this new perennial Anchusa Blue Stars. Mrs. Miniver, a hybrid tea, is the rose pictured here.



Prove you're a showman. The secret of smash color effects is not in what your flowers cost, but in which stands next to what

By Fleeta Brownell Woodroffe

Contrast in shapes add extra punch

Challenging as a bugle call is this trio of hardy, long-lasting perennials showiest from late June until well into August. The triple-decked yellow daisies are formally listed as Heliopsis Summer Gold. The clustered spires belong to Lythrum Morden Pink, with delphiniums at left rear. Snip off spent flowers, and you'll keep new buds coming on for weeks. Plants of all three can be divided after they've taken on size.

Blended colors need contrast in height

The whimsical cup-and-saucer flowers of Canterburybells get a smile from everyone. If you're lucky enough to have plants, or can get them, space them 15 inches apart in a sizable group where your bluest delphiniums can soar rocketlike above them. Prompt removal of each faded flower with thumbnail and forefinger will keep an opal-colored mass of these handsome bells good-looking for a month.

Lilac. Brighter and bigger bunches of bloom than the old-time lilacs ever bore mark the new lilac hybrids. These hybrids also make stocky bushes, are just right for planting at house corners and to back up sunny flower borders

Forsythia. Among the earliest shrubs to bloom, forsythias open with the daffodils. Their slender arching branches make fountains of gold if left to grow freely, but also look well when pruned. Grow early and late kinds

Plant flowering shrubs for Most bloom–least work

By Leslie MacRae

Either way you look at it, flowering shrubs give you a plus. The flowers are a bonus if your first need is for a hedge or greenery about the house to soften hard lines. Their foliage and good outlines are a big extra if your main aim is to have a display of flowers held up where they show best.

The 20 flowering shrubs described here are dependable performers. Each on its own will give you a good show for several weeks. You can have the colors you prefer. All in this list can be planted this spring. All start flowering young. They require practically no attention after you see that they're started well. Yet each has some special charm, or season of bloom that puts it on this selected list.

Pink to red flowers

Weigela in several varieties bursts out into a profusion of soft crimson and light-rose flower-trumpets in early summer. Weigela Vandicek's red flowers start almost at the ground. Like the variety Bristol Ruby, it also repeats satisfactorily with bloom in the fall. Both are excellent as specimens in full sun, or as a background for blue iris and good blue, fall asters. Not for excessively parched locations.

Pink Double-flowering Plum. This showy 4- to 8-foot shrub quite covers itself in tulip time with soft light-pink blooms shaped like tiny roses. Needs full sun. Can be grown as a small tree, with early blue flowers crowded close beneath. Maintain only the original stem, no sprouts.

Daphne Somerset. Low, sweet, and early is the show made by this daphne's load of small light-pink flowers. The rest of the year it somewhat resembles low boxwood in its outlines. Inclined to be evergreen. Fine for massing below windows, it's a shrub that goes well with houses of both traditional and modern architecture.

[Turn to page 282

Flowering quince. Improved forms with coral, apricot, even white, flowers have multiplied the charm of the older "burning-bush." Foliage comes early, persists late. Make good hedges. Supply branches for cutting early

Althea. For late summer bloom, plant the shrubby althea or hibiscus. Celeste, the near-blue pictured, is one of the best. Grown with the white one, Snowdrift, it gives welcome color planted singly or as a tall, fairly slim hedge

Mockorange. For armfuls of sweet-scented flowers at the very time June weddings and graduations are the talk of the town, nothing exceeds the production of the mockoranges. Belle Etoile, pictured, is one of the best

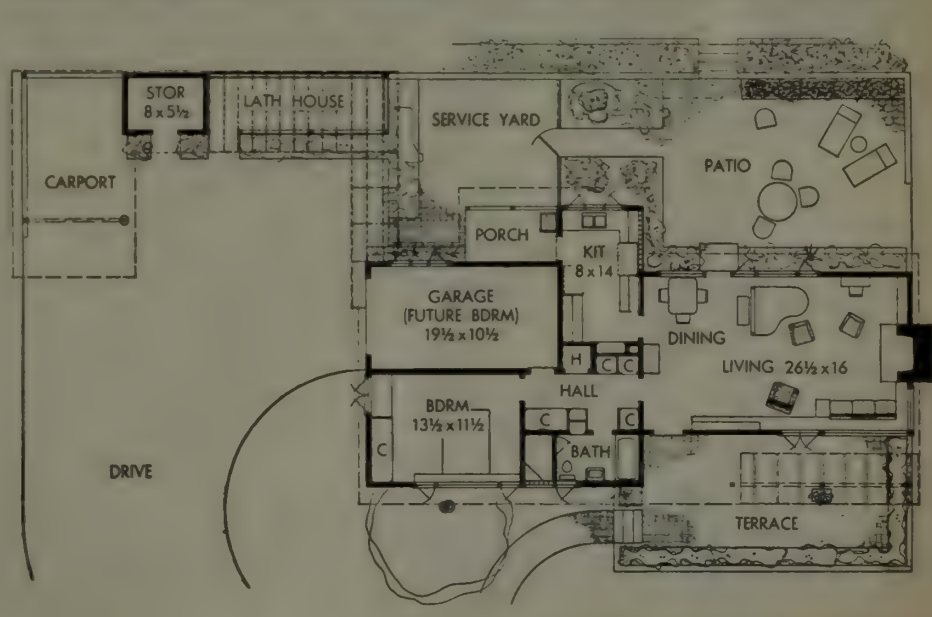
Azalea. Like enormous bouquets, azaleas are the most brilliant of the hardy early-flowering shrubs. Most widely and most successfully grown are Azalea mollis and its hybrids. Colors run from buff to orange-scarlets

When you plan your house,

Build into your setting

By Ethel McCall Head

The best looking house you can build is one that seems to have been designed specifically for its lot. The setting can be a background against which your house will stand out. Or the house can be designed to blend into its setting.



The Pasadena home of Mr. and Mrs. Hayes C. Schlundt, is an excellent example of a house that blends into its setting. It is built of the materials that form its background—its natural wood siding blends into the earth and brush, the rough wood shingles repeat the texture of the leaves; the dark bricks of the chimney are inconspicuous in the shadows of the trees. From the street, only the white trim attracts your eye to the house.

The shape of the house as well as the material used must be considered in making the house either stand out from, or complement, its setting. A two-story house on the Schlundt's lot would have looked out of place. Their one-story ranch-type home adds height and grandeur to the eucalyptus trees on the lot, and its lines harmonize with the easy slope of the hills behind it.

Interior materials, too, carry out the harmony with the setting. The same redwood and touches of white are used again. The brickwork is the same natural color, but has a different pattern; the long, thin bricks emphasize the height of the studio ceiling in the living room. The plywood of the built-ins is coated with clear shellac, and emphasizes the simplicity of other finishes used in the Schlundts' home.

Here is a house perfectly suited to its setting. Slope of rough shingle roof matches slope of hillside beyond. Outside skylight lets sun through, raises eave line so corner windows can be bigger. High-silled windows in bedroom and bath afford ventilation and privacy at the same time. Low brick wall accents lines of the house

Photographs: Julius Shulman

Terrace at rear is sheltered by a hill and the house itself. Note how redwood exterior and plantings match surrounding vegetation. Door opens directly from living-dining area

House fits into an elbow between two hills. The blending texture of the wood shingle roof and redwood board-and-batten exterior would camouflage the house in its setting except for the startling contrast of white trim. House's ground-hugging lines let the trees cast shadows naturally over the house

How to see the Rockies in 2 weeks

By Fred Bond

Horace Greeley wasn't necessarily thinking of your family when he said, "Go west." But few suggestions offered since will be more helpful when you ask yourselves, "Where shall we spend our vacation this year?" If you have ever visited any part of the vast scenic wonderland of which the Rockies are the backbone, you will want to see more of it. And if the Rockies are new to you, any one of the three trips I'm suggesting will prove as memorable a vacation as your family's ever had.

Northern Rockies

The northern trip covers much of the more rugged areas in the Rockies. You are on top of the world in Colorado; at the Tetons you feast on some of the most spectacular mountain scenery on earth; Yellowstone packs more unbelievable phenomena into 2,213,000 acres than any known area of equal size; Glacier is carved from solid rock on a scale so massive it's hard to believe; Mt. Rushmore will give you an emotional lift you'll never forget.

Central Rockies

This trip's set up so you can spend a maximum of time in Rocky Mountain National Park. It allows you time for unhurried sight-seeing, hiking, and plain loafing which you'll find as invigorating nowhere as in the high country of the Central Rockies. The rest of it is just sight-seeing of the sort that leaves you breathless.

Southern Rockies

No other 2,000-mile trip contains as much variety and as great scenic contrasts as this one. You pierce the heart of the Rockies, see Great Salt Lake, the fairyland that is Bryce, the tremendous rock walls of Zion, the earth's most spectacular gash at Grand Canyon, the Petrified Forest, the Painted Desert, ancient cliff dwellings at Mesa Verde, and the world-famous Royal Gorge.

When to go

All high mountain passes on these routes are normally open by June 15 and until around October 1. If you like plenty of snow, go in late June. Avoid Rocky Mountain National Park and Yellowstone on holidays. Accommodations are too difficult to find.

How to get there

Each of the three trips is planned for an average family, traveling by car. However, all of the major points of interest can be reached by rail, air, or bus or some combination of them. Regular tours are conducted through western national parks. If you do drive, you can estimate how long it will take to reach Colorado Springs (starting point for all three trips) by figuring 400 miles a day. All roads on main routes are hard-surfaced. The mountain roads are wide, with moderate grades, and safe.

Where to stay

Motor courts and motels are plentiful. Hotels and lodges are generally good, especially in the national parks. The daily schedules stop you where facilities are ample and dependable, but you should plan to reach each day's destination an hour before dark. If you want to make advance reservations or to know something about a place before you stop, take along a hotel or motor-court directory. For information on national parks there is a check list in the February issue of Better Homes & Gardens.

What will it cost?

Allow 3 cents per mile for your oil and gas. Lodging for two will run from $3.50 to $6 per night; for four, $5 to $8. Meals per person per day $3 (a little less for children). Incidentals $3 per day per party. Two people can make any one of the trips from Colorado Springs for $250; a party of four should get by under $350. Of course, you have to add on what it costs you to reach the Rockies from your home and to return.

Now—which trip for you?

For descriptions of the major attractions, the kind of country each trip covers, and side trips that are worth extra time if you can spare it, see page 230 (Northern Rockies), 232 (Central Rockies), and 234 (Southern Rockies). One of these three vacations is made to order for your family!

Allow this much time to get there

To figure driving time to the Rockies from your home, use zone map above. Each ring indicates an additional day's motoring to Colorado Springs

Travel photographer Fred Bond knows the Rockies as few men do. He traveled more than 200,000 miles by car before writing "Westward How!" a 324-page lavishly illustrated travel guide of the West for vacation-minded American families. Like this article on the Rockies, "Westward How!" (Camera Craft Publishing Company, San Francisco, $6.95) gives routes and scenic highlights throughout the entire western half of America in mile-by-mile, down-to-earth detail, with pictures by the author.

With its trim looks and conventional lines, this little house fits into any neighborhood. As shown here, it has a wood shingle roof, brown-stained clapboards and white trim

Here's the house you asked for—a Five Star home that is Low cost and livable

Living-dining area occupies half basic rectangle of house. Details are effectively plain—simple molding around fireplace, recessed shelves, big window which is duplicated at other end of room

Photographs: Robert Cleveland

Breezeway links kitchen with garage, is conveniently placed for cool summer suppers. You can glass it in for use as a sunporch in winter, or use it as a supervised playroom the year around

Over all dimensions: 62 by 23 feet
Architect: Henry Dysland, Richmond, California
Owners: Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Mueller, Madison, Wisconsin

By John Normile, A. I. A.

The home you see on these pages was chosen as Better Homes & Gardens Five Star Home No. 1904 not because it's the cheapest house you can build. It isn't. But it gives you as much livability for the price as any you will find.

Why?

You save money in three ways. You save because the major part of the house is a simple rectangle—the most economical shape to build.

You save because the roofs are kept as simple as possible—every extra ridge or valley in a roof costs more.

You save because standard lengths of lumber can be used throughout the house—you use every foot of lumber you buy, throw away none.

This isn't a large house; it has only 866 square feet of first floor space, plus an 8½- by 12-foot breezeway and a garage. Its livability comes not from its size, but from its arrangement of rooms.

In the usual four-room house, all rooms are jammed into a rectangle—jammed until no room is large enough to be practical. Here, however, Architect Henry Dysland has put only three rooms in the rectangle, giving you a 22- by 12½-foot living room, one large bedroom, a small bedroom, and a bathroom large enough to move around in.

The kitchen is in a wing by itself. It has its own eating space, and also is conveniently sandwiched between the breezeway, where you can eat in hot weather, and the dining area.

Off the kitchen are stairs to the basement, where are the furnace, laundry equipment, a fruit room, space for an 11- by 29-foot recreation room, and 170 square feet of storage space. The entrance hall and coat closet are built over the basement stairs.

Though there is no separate dining room, the location of the entrance hall and doors to the kitchen and bedroom hall tend to separate the living and dining areas. Placing the fireplace opposite the entrance emphasizes the living portion, leaves wall space for a number of furniture arrangements. Placing the door to the bedroom hall across from the kitchen door puts the traffic lane between the living and dining ends of the living room, separating [Turn to page 205

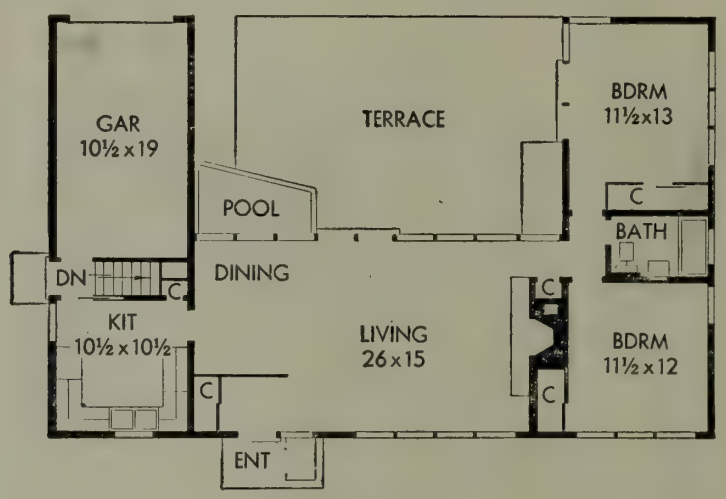
Heated by the sun



There's a forecast of the future in the way this unusually designed home controls solar heat

From street, the Myers' house looks conventional. All windows are top-hinged, and fit well into the pattern of batten latticework at the corner of the house

Rear wall drops straight down from ridge line between garage and bedroom wing. Through this glass (pictured before louvers were up) house gets solar heat

By Ann Peppard White

Solar heating isn't new. Inhabitants of Trinidad and the Caribbean islands have used the sun for heating for centuries. But the problems of using the sun to heat your home are more complex in northern climates.

To prove that the problems can be solved, Architect Ralph Myers designed and built a solar home for his family in Kansas City, Kansas. And in designing it, Mr. Myers not only had to provide a solution to solar heating, but answer the demands a housewife makes of her home.

Here is the story of that home—told by Mr. Myers from the viewpoint of the architect, by Mrs. Myers (page 258) from the standpoint of a housewife living in a solar house.

Mr. Myers: "We started with a sheet of paper, and I made Mrs. Myers write down her needs, so she couldn't change her mind in the middle of the work: plenty of closet space, all rooms on one floor, a fully mechanized kitchen, modern in design but also in the general character of the neighborhood, which is a village of Cape Cod houses, all as alike as a pan of biscuits.

"We have a solar house. One-third of our heat comes from the sun. We placed the house with its back (street side) to the north wind, and with the living room looking into the southern sky.

"The street side is conventional. I placed the awning-type windows high; they let warm air out easily, keep out rain, give us privacy, and don't take up wall space inside the house. Siding is royal-size shingles, and I used ordinary V-grooved siding for the upper part of the walls. Low planting ties the house to the lawn, and a permanent window box under the north windows gives a colorful touch to the entrance. The front door gives a double effect, but only the wood door opens. The ribbed glass is stationary, and adds light to the living room.

"Compared with the front of the house, a straight-on view of the southern exposure is quite a surprise. Here's where the solar unit is installed in our double-ceilinged living room. We both wanted plenty of sun, and I saw no reason why I couldn't use the sun to do part of the heating in winter. We have a furnace, but on clear winter days it idles, though the temperature is near zero outdoors.

"The large south window is divided into two sections. The lower portion is shaded by a horizontal slat-type shade designed to keep sun off glass in summer and to let it come through the glass in winter.

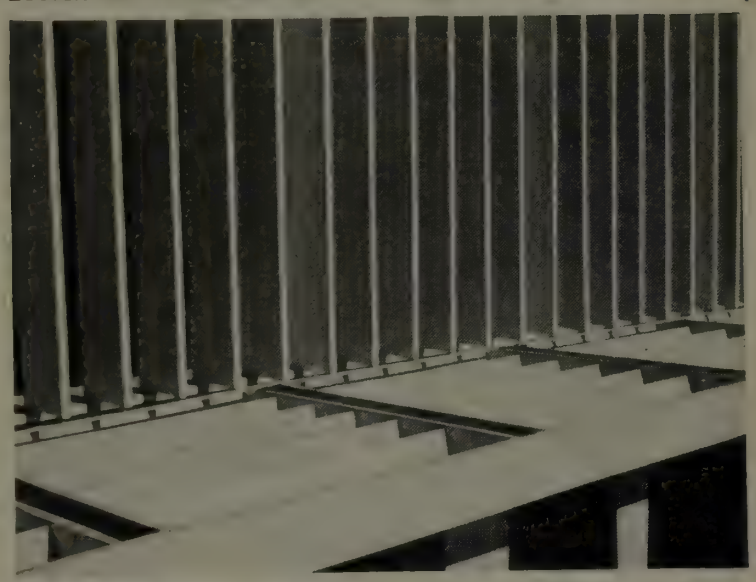
Here's how the Myers' louver-controlled solar heating system works



ARCHITECT MYERS devised a system of vertical louvers to control the sun's heat. Bottom ends of louvers are attached by dowels to a horizontal rod (right). A thermostatically controlled motor pushes the rod and turns the louvers. In warm weather louvers turn to let in maximum light without letting sun's rays strike glass directly, or can be closed entirely (above). In winter louvers remain perpendicular to the sun so that maximum heat can be absorbed from sun's rays (lower right). Trellis (below) keeps the summer sun off lower glass panels.

Color Schemes

from your carpet

By Christine Holbrook

Gone is the false idea that your rug or carpet binds you to one color scheme. We prove to you here that there's new life for that rug or carpet of yours, and a brilliant future for any rug or carpeting you plan to buy.

On the following pages are shown four rugs and carpets that are in many homes today. For each carpet or rug we show two schemes that are built up from the floor covering. Note what has been done in these rooms. You'll find the same furnishings with each carpet, but your marked difference in each room is the color scheme. You'll hardly believe they are the same rooms.

You'll find it fascinating to trace color schemes in relation to the rug or carpet in each room. You'll find it helpful to study the interplay of harmonizing colors, and note the use of such simple things as a bright bouquet, a bowl of fruit, or a cushion as color accents. Such details are the finishing touches to your whole color scheme.

Instead of feeling bound to one scheme, you'll find a number of color schemes suggesting themselves. It will come home to you that with a little imagination you can have totally different, limitless color schemes as the old ones wear out, get drab, or boring.

You can refresh your whole room—and discover new life in your rug or carpet—by a change of color in walls, upholstery, lamps, and accessories. For example, you can plan a contrasting color scheme, as shown in the upper picture on the opposite page, or a soft, blending color scheme, as shown in the lower picture opposite.

Flower-patterned carpets that you might have felt restricted you to one plan give you freedom to work a wide variety of color schemes by picking up different colors from the carpet design, as in the room on page 55, with its two totally different color schemes.

To put you carpet-wise: In size, the floor area is second only to the wall area of your rooms, so decide carefully if you want to live with a gay pattern underfoot and plain walls, or the other way around. For example, compare the treatment used with patterned carpeting, on page 55, with the other rooms on these pages.

Plain carpeting makes any room look larger and less busy. With plain carpeting you can choose the boldest wallpaper, draperies, and upholstery, and switch patterns and colors often. The room on page 54 is a good illustration of this. If there are too many jogs in the walls, plain or two-tone carpeting will minimize these flaws.

A figured rug or carpet makes a handsome cue for solid-colored draperies and upholstery. You'll find this illustrated on page 55. Many-colored patterns—in Oriental rugs, Victorian florals, and the new huge-figured rugs—will restrict you to plain and simple stripes in the rest of the room.

A self-tone carpet—a pattern made of two or more shades of the same color—gives you freedom in decorating with figured fabrics.

Textured and sculptured carpets allow as much freedom in the choice of drapery and upholstery patterns as plain carpets.

We would like to know which of these rooms is your favorite. Won't you write to let us know?

Six more color schemes on following pages

If you have a tone-on-tone rug

A tone-on-tone rug (has several shades of the same color) is practical for homemakers with growing families because it doesn't show tracking. And because of its play on one color, such a rug allows great liberty in color-scheming. For example, reds and greens are used here against a neutral wall. Patterns in curtains and wing chair harmonize in coloring, their different designs giving informality to the room.

Another color scheme from the same rug

From the same rug comes this scheme in brown and yellow used with the maple furnishings against a yellow wall. The bay-window wall is made an important feature of the room by painting it in a contrasting color. A throw rug under the coffee table is a practical idea to save wear in this much-used spot and to accent the grouping. Both these rooms have personality and a lived-in look without being cluttered.

If you have a textured carpet

Secret of the success of this room with all its mixed period furnishings is the use of a carpet with a new textured weave. The soft beige wall-to-wall carpeting makes an excellent background for the play of a contrasting color scheme. Because of its neutral color, beige is a particularly safe choice when your furnishings are pieces collected over the years, or if you believe in mixing periods. Our textured carpet provides a common ground for Victorian, Eighteenth Century, and Modern furniture. Try, as we have, painting walls contrasting colors, and placing dark, rich colors against the light walls or light colors against the dark. Here the draperies become important in the room because they keynote all the colors of the furnishings.

Another color scheme from a textured carpet

Same room but what a change has been effected in our color scheme by repeating the beige color of our textured carpet on one wall and painting the other the new deep blue of which you will be seeing quite a lot. Beige wall becomes a perfect foil for the brilliant rose of the slipcovered sofa. The sofa's bright color is essential to give warmth and to balance the deep color of the other wall. Light draperies and Victorian chair painted white bridge the sharp contrast of the walls; note how the covering on the Victorian chair and the side chair repeat the blue of the wall in the room. Clever wall decoration is the use of ivy plants, their depth of color repeating the beauty of the light wall.

If you have a plain carpet

LEFT: For a room where you wish to combine pattern and a textured weave in your furnishings, a plain carpet is always a wise choice. However, that doesn't mean that you have to be conservative in your choice of colors. See how we have used a brilliant green in the carpet and combined other contrasting colors with it.

LOWER LEFT: Here a new color scheme with radical change is worked out with the same green carpet. Still held is the same color in the breakfront to pick up the rose in the draperies and plaid chair. Since there is pattern in the draperies, we have slipcovered the sofa in plain material.

If you have a colorful patterned carpet

ABOVE RIGHT: The figured carpet, a worksaver and a well-known camouflager of footprints, gives a wide choice of color schemes, but simplicity is the secret. Pick one color from the carpet and let it dominate the room. Here it is blue-green on walls and sofa, relieved by brilliant touches of harmonizing red and yellow in other furnishings in the room.

RIGHT: Proof again that your practical figured carpet can offer you a variety of color is this totally different color scheme. Against soft brown walls, rose picked up from the carpet is used as the dominating color in curtains and sofa. Clever touch is the striped material on armchair and ottoman that repeats all the colors of the room, even to the blue of the bookcase lining.

Ways to use odds and ends of dishes

- Do you have odds and ends of old family dishes you would like to use?
- Is your best set of china incomplete?
- Have you broken some cups, can't replace them? Pictures show you what to do.

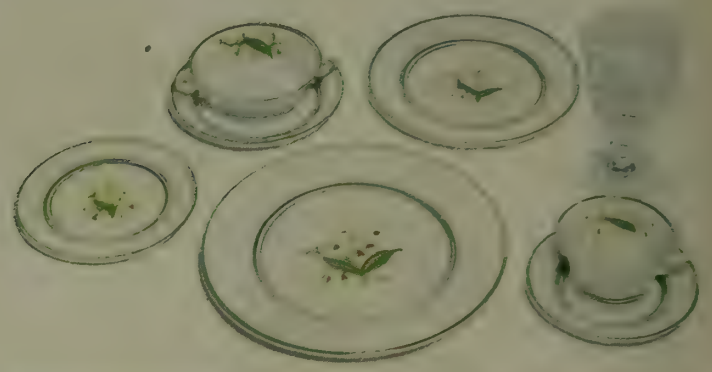
By Fae Rowley

You dropped another cup last night? We can't put the pieces back together again, but we can show you how you can use your odd cups and saucers.



Dishes don't have to match to make a beautiful table. The pictures on these pages prove that.

The secret is to keep a dominance of one color and kind of dishes, using the odds-and-ends dishes as accents. China, pottery, and earthenware, you'll see, can be successfully combined if they harmonize in color.

If you're thinking of buying a new set of pottery, be sure to choose a color that will go with the dishes you already have. So you can use them together—third column. If your best set of china is still incomplete—first column,—you'll find other dishes to fill in. It's a game of mix 'em and match 'em—a game that makes table setting more interesting for you and for the folks who come to dinner.

Where to get it, page 299

. . . if your good set of china is incomplete

If you have just the dinner plates in your good china—or happen to have an odd set of dinner plates—use butter and salad plates, cups and saucers in pottery or earthenware that repeat a color in plates

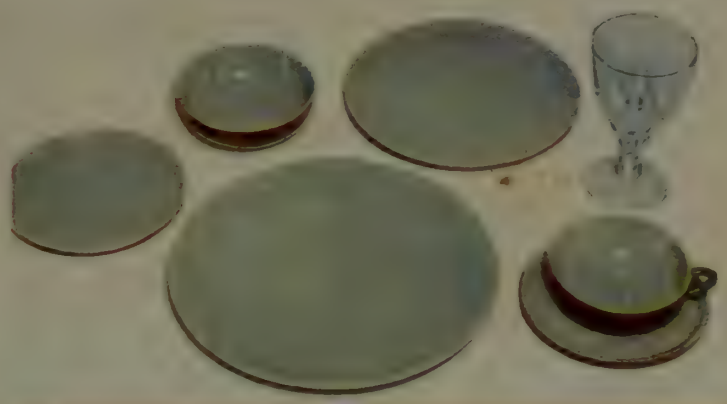
Here you have the dinner and butter plates, but otherwise haven't completed the set. To fill in, look for one of these green-leaf pottery snack sets. It will harmonize with most any kind or color of dishes

Photographs: Stanley

Your china service is short the soup bowls? Pastel pottery bowl shown here accents design in the china. Look for color that matches decoration on the plates. Inexpensive salt and peppers match bowl

. . . if you have an incomplete set of earthenware

If dinner plates are all that's left of your old blue dishes, don't stow them away on the top shelf. Look for an inexpensive ruby glass salad and beverage set. Ruby red and blue complement each other



Here's another solution. Plain white earthenware dishes that match the white in the blue dishes will supplement the items you can't get. Note how plainness of the white enhances the highly designed blue

If most of the cups in the blue set are broken, you can use white cups on blue saucers. Just be sure to use another plate or two in the same color and design as the saucer. Dinner plate is white earthenware

. . . if you would like to use china and pottery dishes together

Your two-toned pottery set gets an accent note here. The floral design salad plate has colors which match the underside of the pottery. A clever way to make use of an odd set of gift salad plates

In this setting an exquisite china plate in unusual color and design is the main attraction. To enhance it, use your two-toned pottery set —butter and salad plates, salad dressing pitcher, and cup and saucer

Better Homes & Gardens announces

the winners in the fourth

More Beautiful America Competition

The fourth More Beautiful America Competition of Better Homes & Gardens has been judged and the winners selected. Although this is the fourth such competition, judging each one has always been a deep and revealing look into the heart of America.

You don't get the soft speech of the South, the twang of the Maine "down easter," or the long drawl of the plains in the scrapbooks of pictures and clippings which are presentations in this competition. But you get the same feeling of a great and varied nation when you look over these photographs and find a palm tree, a white New England church or a Rocky Mountain peak in the background.

You get something else, too, from these stories of how people in all sections of the United States took a good look at their home towns and then decided they could improve on what they saw. It becomes very plain that all Americans share the same desire to live in a better community.

But the desire for improvement is only part of the story. Each organization which entered the competition turned a wish into action and an idea into accomplishment. The result in every case was a step toward a More Beautiful America.

There is little in common among the winners of the competition just ended except that each one of them was able to see something that needed doing—and then went ahead and did it. Entries—and prizewinners—came from cities as large as Portland, Oregon, and Cleveland, Ohio, and as small as Macclesfield, North Carolina, which has a population of 367.

The Grand Sweepstakes prize goes to the Woman's Club of little Macclesfield. The amazing story of how these women got their town to overhaul itself from one end to another will be told in a later issue. It is a story that should be an inspiration to all of us, no matter where our home towns are.

Other prizewinners planned and planted memorial gardens, beautified highways, made parks and playgrounds—all of them did something that beautified and improved their communities. Better Homes & Gardens is proud to have a part in accomplishing so much, and happy to award the following prizes:

Sweepstakes winner
Macclesfield Women's Club, Macclesfield, North Carolina $1,000

1st place, cities over 100,000 population
The Cleveland Rose Society, Cleveland, Ohio $1,000

CAKE high, light, and handsome

Baking a beautiful cake is a momentous event in the kitchen.

First the neatly sifted flour, fluffy shortening and sugar, egg whites in a big bowl for whipping—everything carefully measured and blended. Then the awesome moment when you look in the oven to find your masterpiece has risen high and golden brown.

Next the deep swirls of creamy boiled frosting or smooth, rich caramel or thick, chocolate fudge—the cake's crowning glory. One last swish with the spatula and you hand the frosting bowl over to the waiting small fry who thank you with an "Mmmmm," then begin to grumble about the skimpy lickins.

The picture cakes are four big favorites. Top left, a burnt sugar cake frosted with thick caramel and covered with chopped nuts. The recipe will tell you exactly how to make the burnt sugar. Top right, a delicate white cake and creamy boiled frosting under moist, pink-tinted coconut. It's easy to tint the coconut—we tell you how in the frosting recipe.

Lower left, light tender pineapple chiffon, pineapple-butter-cream icing. There's pineapple juice in the cake, crushed pineapple in the icing. Lower right, a dark dazzler—a big devil's food cake piled high with seven-minute frosting, trimmed with shaved chocolate. For how to make cakes to match the pictures, see the recipes for both cakes and frostings on page 209.

New in the kitchen are the cabinets, equipment, bar, tile, paper. No doors or windows were moved, no structural changes made

The linoleum is old. Removing old cabinets left a vacant space in the corner under the bar. Unable to get matching linoleum to fill in with, Johnston cut enough out from beneath the legless range

Copper skillets, leaf plates, and most other accessories are more than pretties; they're used on the range and table. The old stools had been upholstered in red leather. Johnston enameled the leather, and after seven months' use it shows no cracks or peeling

Your kitchen isn't any older than what's in it

By Walter Adams

A kitchen is like an egg. It doesn't matter how new or old the shell is, but what's inside.

If you doubt that, try to guess this kitchen's age.

Not even Myrna Johnston, Better Homes & Gardens foods and equipment editor, whose kitchen it is, knows its age. The place was an Iowa farmhouse, years ago. Somebody remodeled it once, before the Johnstons bought it. Now Mrs. Johnston has redone the kitchen again; and though it's the same old shell, the kitchen itself is strictly fresh, country laid.

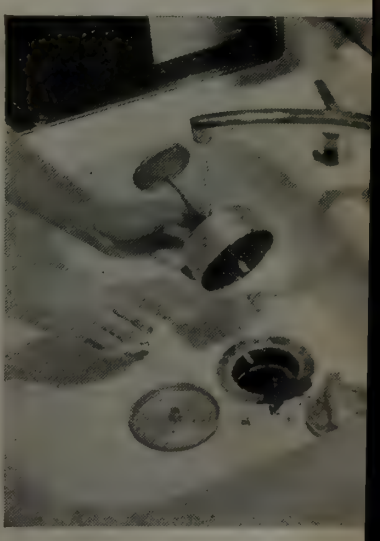
It's useful to realize this kinship of the kitchen to the egg so that you won't, like so many women, sit in your old kitchen souring because you can't have a new house and thus a new kitchen.

It's useful to realize that with the kitchen, more than with any other room, the house is only a shell, and that the kitchen is just as new, as modern, and as useful as the things you put in it.

It's also useful to realize that sour women are pretty awful.

The 7-foot-long eating bar takes less space than a table, is ideal for workaday mornings, when the Johnstons must eat and then scatter like quail, the elders to their offices, Joed to junior high. First one up gets the cereal and morning paper. After breakfast, while the women are getting their hats, Mr. Johnston stacks the dishes in the dishwasher, turns the switch. When everyone comes home in the evening the kitchen is clean, the dishes ready to use

Kitchen uses odd corners, finds place for things, gets rid of garbage



Trays, knives slide into what was seven wasted inches between the range and wall. Vertical rods separate big and little trays

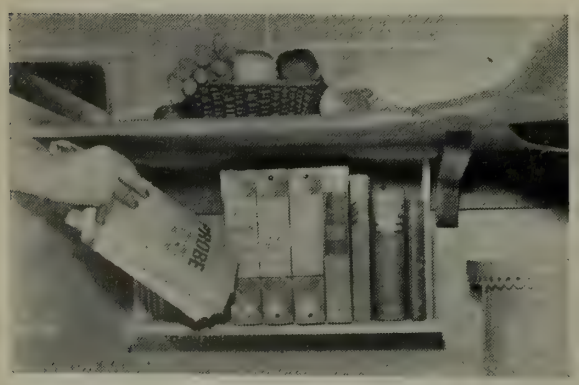
Bulky platters, vases, chafing dishes go into the rarely used area above the cabinets. The doors were papered over, cut free

With no cabinet to fit over the refrigerator, the Johnstons blandly decided shelves for pottery and brass would be smarter anyway

Garbage eater takes even corncobs, ends messy jobs like digging scraps from sink, grounds from pot

More on this kitchen and how it was put together on next page →

Your kitchen isn't any older than what's in it



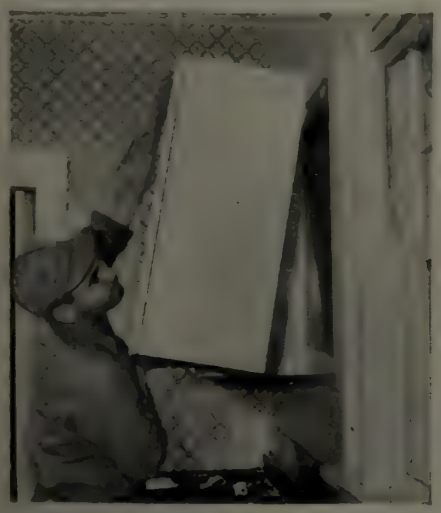
Begins on preceding page

All three Johnstons like food, cooking; none, understandably, loves pot walloping, cleaning up. Now that equipment takes over menial work, the kitchen is a popular place. Dishes are done morning, night

No dinky, always-full wastebasket, this. This one, squared on two sides, is set on casters so that it rolls into the unused corner under the eating bar when not needed. In the Johnston house it holds a week's accumulation of paper, gets emptied Saturday mornings

Here is how you get the morning paper and cook books out of the way. The rack, a plywood top and bottom joined with five quarter-inch dowel rods for each end, hangs beneath the bar where no one sits

The bar and the hinged, up-folding 8-inch-wide shelf beneath become service decks during parties when the Johnstons are pushed for space: soups on the lower deck, salad plates, cups, other dishes on the upper one. Decks are fine for used dishes, too →



Good soups may be made in an old pot, yes; but the end result of this pleasant kitchen, mechanically equipped to take over much of the dirty work, is that, more than before, the Johnstons share the work. They find the pre-dinner gathering of the clan as warmly companionable as dinner itself, a fact the sociologists will see significant

Eating bar takes little room, develops second deck

Photographs: Marion Pease

The maple top between the range and refrigerator eliminates any further need for a worktable, breadboard, or slicing block, is always out ready for use. The Johnstons find it the most used work spot in the kitchen. Joed, like her mother, often bakes, still uses the rolling pin from a child's set given to her six years ago

Putting new insides in an old kitchen is simpler than you think. Cabinets are hung from brackets screwed onto wall

Base cabinets are just uncrated, slipped into place, screwed to wall. They're leveled up on old floors with wood strips

To fur ceiling down to top of cabinets, carpenter built a simple skeleton of 2x2's, faced it with a pressed wood

Old plaster doesn't have to come off before tiling. Tile setter just nails composition lath to it to provide flat base

How to make

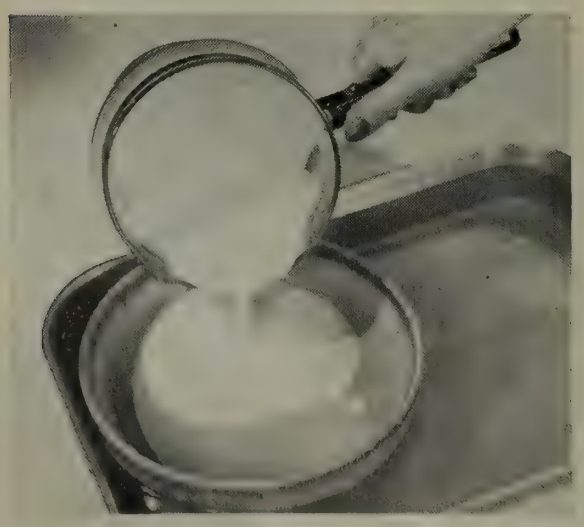
Perfect custard

By Tasting-Test Kitchen Staff

A perfect custard is a perfect dessert—because it's a dessert for all the family. And because its ingredients are so simple—eggs, sugar, salt, milk, and flavoring.

Stir custard while it cooks (see pictures at left) and you get a creamy smooth, golden pudding to serve cool in a big bowl or as a sauce for snow pudding, prune whip, or squares of cake. Bake it (see pictures next page) and it's delicately tender, keeps its shape if you want to turn it out to serve sundae-style with fruit or chocolate saûce.

Pictures give you some of the tricks in making custard perfectly and also show you ways to serve it.



Stirred Custard

Beat eggs until blended, but not foamy. Heat milk to scalding in the top of the double boiler; add sugar and salt. Stir milk into eggs. (Quart measuring cup prevents spatters; holder prevents skidding)

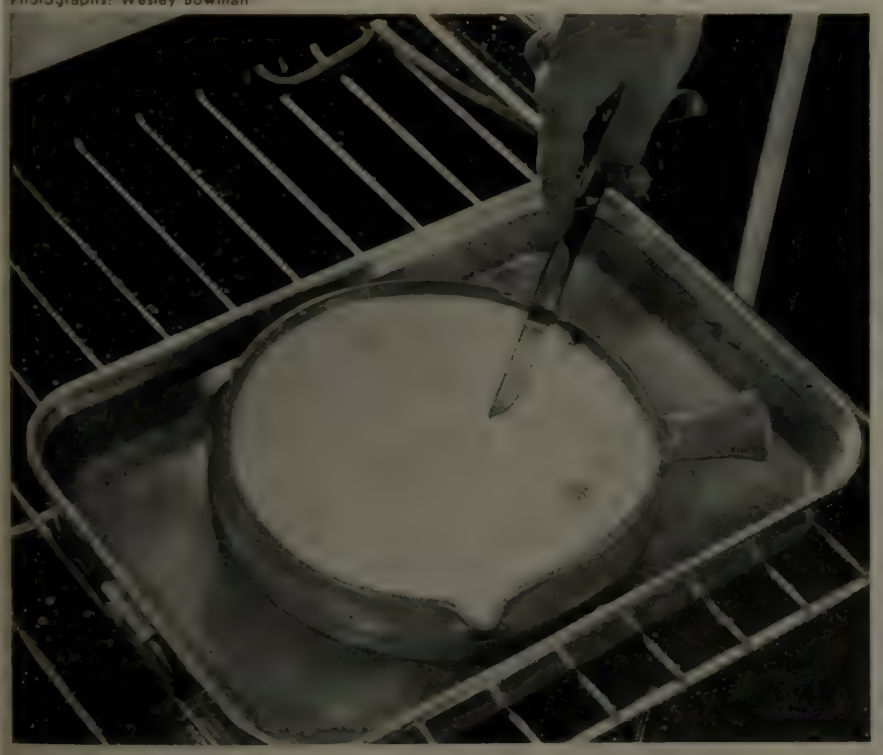
When the custard mixture coats a metal spoon, it's done. Stir constantly during cooking. Hot-but-not-boiling water in bottom pan shouldn't touch top pan. The minute custard is done, add ½ teaspoon vanilla

Pour custard into a chilled serving dish to cool. Here the dish is placed in a pan of cold water. This starts the cooling quickly, and prevents the custard from overcooking. Keep stirring for a few minutes

Old-fashioned Floating Island. Make meringues, recipe on page 247. Drop in small mounds on chilled custard. Polka-dot each island with tart, bright-colored jelly, and serve at once. Meringue may be baked

Baked Custard

Beat eggs, sugar, and salt slightly, then stir in scalded milk. Add vanilla. You needn't scald milk for baked custard, but it does cut baking time by about 20 minutes



Pour mixture into custard cups and sprinkle with nutmeg. Pour hot water around cups—½ to 1 inch is plenty. Bake in a slow oven (325°) 30 to 40 minutes or until done

Don't test custard until it has baked 25 minutes. Disturbing it before may make it separate. Set baked custards on rack to cool. They won't be quite done in the center, but they will hold enough heat to finish cooking. Above: Serve cool custards with crisp cookies. Serve right in the baking cups

Photographs: Wesley Bowman

To test when a big or little baked custard is done, insert a metal knife a little off center. The knife should come out with only a fleck of custard still clinging to it

Spoon mixture from the big baked custard into sherbet glasses. A large strawberry, stem and all, is the topper. Serve baked custard with wafers or butter cookies

Breaded Veal Sirloin Steak is moist, fork-tender, easy for the carver to serve. Braise it in tomato juice for added flavor. Strips of bright pimiento trim the buttered asparagus spears and the bow of spiced pears which accompany it

Veal Casserole Supreme is breaded veal cubes, browned in the skillet—then slow-baked with mushrooms and chunks of celery. Bake some potatoes while the oven's on. They will take exactly the same time as the casserole

Baked Ham is the traditional feature at Easter dinner or after-church breakfasts. Garnish here is flowerets of peach slices on top of the brown-sugar glaze. Peach halves tucked around edge of the platter are filled with raisin sauce

Leg of Lamb is garnished with bacon. Each strip is snipped on the diagonal several places. There's mint jelly in the pineapple "holes." For a hint of garlic flavor, rub meat with cut garlic clove before baking the French-style roast

These Meats make the meal

What you put on the meat platter can decide just how big a success dinner will be. Here are delicious ways to cook beef, veal, pork, and lamb

It's all eyes on the meat platter—what Dad's going to serve. Meat is the big part of the meal. Decide what it's to be and how you're going to fix it, and the rest is easy.

Each meat here is pictured as it will look when you call the folks to the table. Look for garnish ideas you can use as well as new recipes. Some of the meats you'll simmer top of range, some will be ideal in an oven meal, all will be good eating.

NESSELRODE CHIFFON CAKE

Heat oven to 325° (slow moderate) and...

1. In first bowl, sift together:

2 cups sifted Gold Medal flour (spoon lightly into cup, don't pack)
1½ cups sugar
3 tsp. baking powder
1 tsp. salt

Form a well and add these:

½ cup Wesson Oil
7 unbeaten egg yolks (medium sized)
¾ cup cold water
2 tsp. vanilla
grated rind of 1 lemon (about 2 tsp.)

Beat with spoon until smooth. Easy with Wesson Oil!

2. In second bowl, put:

1 cup egg whites (7 or 8 medium)
½ tsp. cream of tartar

Beat into stiff peaks, stiffer than for meringue.

3. Pour egg yolk mixture gradually over beaten egg whites, gently folding until blended. DON'T STIR. Pour immediately into ungreased 10-inch tube pan, 4 inches deep.

Bake 55 min. at 325°, then increase to 350° (moderate) for 10 to 15 min., or until top springs back when lightly touched. Turn pan upside down, placing tube over neck of bottle; let hang, free of table, until cold. Loosen sides with spatula; turn pan over and hit edge sharply on table to loosen.

NESSELRODE ICING: Combine 2 egg whites, 1½ cups sugar, ½ tsp. salt, ¼ tsp. cream of tartar, ⅓ cup water. Cook over boiling water, beating constantly with rotary beater 7 min., or until icing peaks. Cool. Add 1 tsp. rum flavoring, ¼ cup chopped drained maraschino cherries, ¼ cup chopped nut meats. Ice cake. Strew top with ½ square chocolate, prepared as shavings.

If you use self rising flour, omit baking powder and salt.

FOR SALADS & COOKING

Bright meat idea! You make it with the sweet, country flavor of Del Monte Corn

BRAND

Two delicious styles: Golden Whole Kernel, Golden Cream Style

One more good food from the brand that puts FLAVOR FIRST

No bones! No waste! Tastes like ham! And the special goodness of DEL MONTE Brand Corn makes this new meat recipe a two-way treat!

Those plump, bright DEL MONTE Corn kernels are full of sweet, hearty flavor — the kind that makes women ask what brand you buy, and makes men ask for second helpings.

That's because DEL MONTE makes such a point of tenderness and high natural sugar content in corn. Whether it's sunny DEL MONTE Golden Whole Kernel — or kernel-crammed DEL MONTE Golden Cream Style — the kernels are very thin-skinned. The flavor is sweet — rich and satisfying, too. And to double your corn enjoyment — try both styles!

CORNPATCH CANADIAN BACON

- 1 lb. piece Canadian bacon, unsliced*
- 18 whole cloves
- 5 onion wedges
- Prepared mustard
- Brown sugar
- ½ cup syrup from DEL MONTE Apricots, Peaches, etc.
- 1 to 2 cans DEL MONTE Golden Whole Kernel Corn

Remove casing from bacon; place in shallow baking pan, fat side up. Make 5 slashes halfway through meat. Insert onion wedges in slashes. Stud each meat section with 3 cloves. Spread with mustard; pat on brown sugar to cover; pour fruit syrup over. Bake in slow oven (300° F.), basting often, about 1¼ hrs. Spoon off excess fat from sauce in pan; add corn; salt, pepper and stir. Return to oven about 10 min., till corn is hot. To carve, cut meat in thin slices. Serves 4 to 6.

Great idea for dressing up canned pork loaf, too! Use 3 onion wedges to a 12-oz. can, to serve 4.*

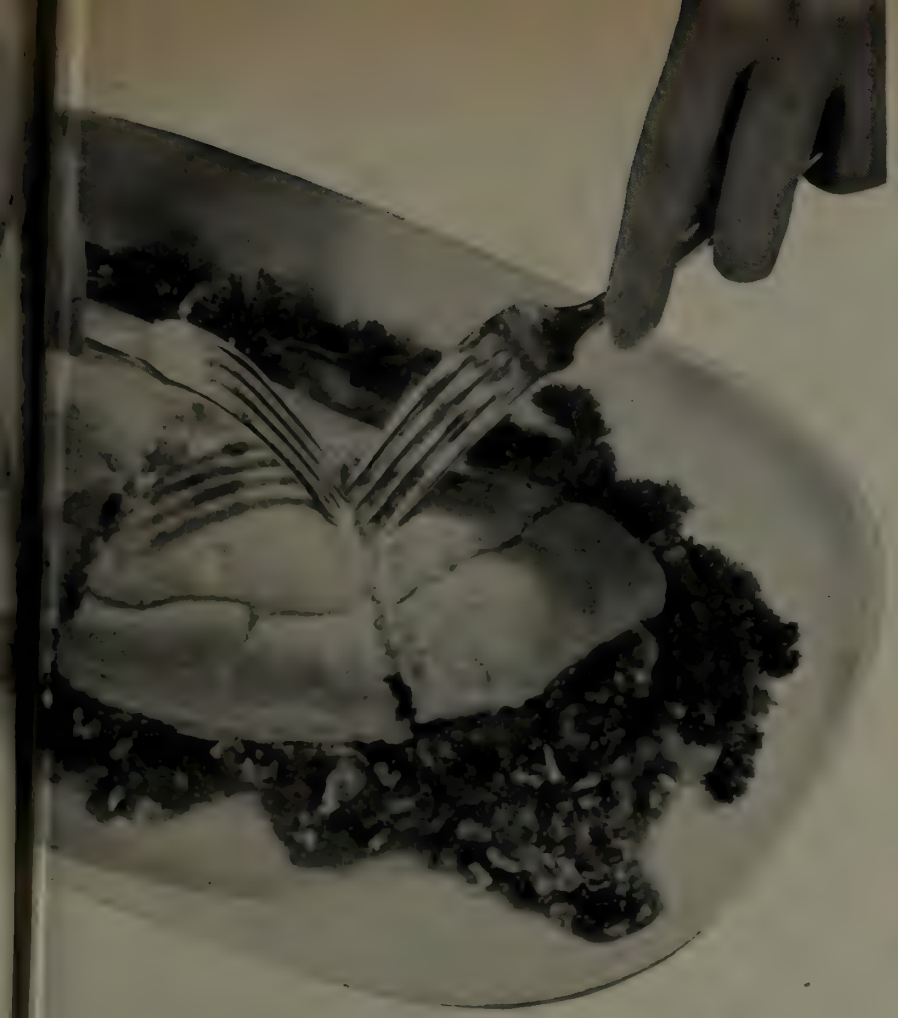
How to make a perfect fluffy omelet

PERFECT fluffy omelet is golden brown, so tender and delicate it almost melts in your mouth. It should be airy and moist, high and handsome on the platter.

The art of omelet making begins with the skillet you use. To season skillet, heat it slightly, rub with salt and paper toweling, and coat with unsalted fat. Now you're ready to follow directions below for making and serving a fluffy omelet.

To make the omelet



1 Separate yolks from whites of 6 eggs. Beat whites till frothy. Add 3 tablespoons water and 1½ teaspoons salt. Continue beating till whites are stiff and moist but not dry. Add dash of pepper to egg yolks; beat till thick and lemon-colored. Pour yolks over whites; fold gently into whites with spatula until well blended

Photographs: Wesley Bowman

2 Heat 1 to 2 tablespoons butter, fortified margarine, or cooking fat in a 9- or 10-inch skillet. When drop of water just sizzles in the hot fat, skillet is ready. Pour mixture in skillet. Spread mixture evenly with spatula

To serve omelet, tear apart gently with two forks as in photograph. This keeps omelet light and fluffy

3 Cover skillet. Cook the omelet over low heat until it puffs, about 5 to 10 minutes. Now lift omelet carefully around the edges to check the color of the bottom—see picture. When omelet is a delicate golden brown, it's ready for the oven. Take off the lid. Finish cooking omelet in moderately slow oven (325°) 15 minutes

4 You can tell omelet is done if spatula comes out clean, top of the omelet springs back to touch, and omelet pulls away from sides of the skillet—as in picture

Biscuit Tricks by Betty Crocker

How to cut biscuits without any scraps: Cut first biscuit at edge of dough circle. Tuck point of dough under; pat to form rounded side of second biscuit. Do same thing each time—tucking under scraps. No re-rolling. Last biscuits light as first!

No last-minute fuss! When you use Bisquick, you can make up your biscuits 1 hour ahead, cover and store in refrigerator; or keep ½ hour at room temperature. (Special leavening in Bisquick.) Then bake in time to serve hot and fragrant, with crust crisp and bright.

Just add milk to Bisquick for biscuits! You measure out six ingredients at once when you measure out Bisquick. We mix all six for you: Home-type ingredients (including a special blend of Gold Medal Flour), proportioned just right. That is why you get such delicious biscuits every time.

Have oven very hot (450°) when you put in biscuits. They rise higher and brown better. If baking your biscuits at once, heat oven before you start to mix: Important when you make Bisquick biscuits, as mixing takes so little time!

To get biscuits to table piping hot, bake in small pie pans. Put a hot pan of biscuits on serving plate at the table; just enough biscuits to go around once. Keep the rest warm in oven. (Make them with Bisquick. Feather-light, fragrant and meltingly tender.)

12 mixes in one! That's what Bisquick is. A mix for biscuits—also dumplings, waffles, pancakes, hot rolls, etc. Directions for 12 bakings on every box. Tested by our General Mills food staff in our Minneapolis kitchens. Do try Bisquick for all of them!

Perhaps you have an unusual combination of flavors such as mincemeat and pumpkin.

Vegetables include fix-ups for vegetables that come in a can—particularly those old stand-bys corn, peas, and green beans. If you've a special way of cooking and serving a fresh vegetable in season, tell us about it, too.

Rhubarb pie, a two-cruster, bubbling hot, juicy, filled with rosy rhubarb our rhubarb pie?

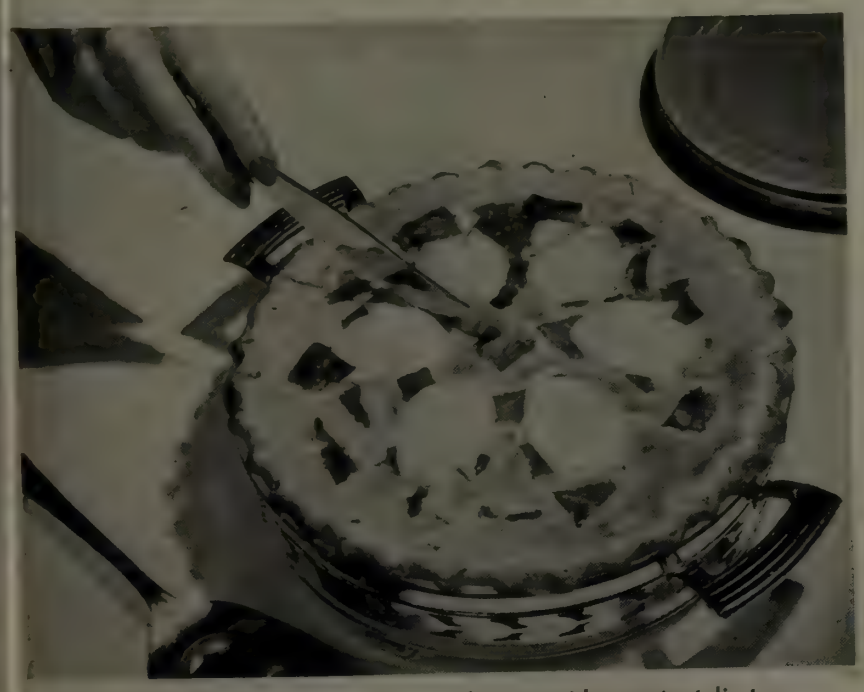
Folks know spring is really here when you pass them rhubarb pie—the first fresh-fruit pie of the year.

Does your family like Rhubarb Cream Pie? It calls for eggs, a little nutmeg. Or plain Rhubarb Pie—no eggs, a little orange peel for extra flavor? Let them take their choice. We show step-by-step directions for making both kinds below.

Rhubarb Cream Pie. Tender rhubarb pieces in a rich custard of eggs and the juice from the fruit



Prepare 3 cups rhubarb, cut in 1-inch pieces. Blend 1½ cups sugar, 3 tablespoons enriched flour, ½ teaspoon nutmeg, and 1 tablespoon butter. Add 2 well-beaten eggs; beat smooth. Pour over rhubarb in 9-inch pastry-lined pan. (Pastry recipe page 104.)

Top with pastry cut in fancy shapes. Bake in a hot oven (450°) for 10 minutes, then in moderate oven (350°) about 30 minutes.

Spring house-cleaning tips

How to wash and iron curtains

By Jessie Prather

Now is the time for spanking-clean curtains at your windows to match the sparkle of the house you've cleaned. Here are some tips which will help you do a professional curtain washing and ironing job, so your curtains will hang straight, and look crisp and bright.

How to wash curtains

To get rid of any surface dust on curtains and thus make your washing job easier, go over the curtains with vacuum attachment or shake them vigorously

Measure curtains before washing, so you can stretch them back to proper size and shape. To save time next curtain washday, keep these measurements. If you have a curtain stretcher, you can save resetting it by washing all the curtains of the same length at the same time

Photographs: Stanley

Mark the length of the curtain on your ironing board cover with an indelible pencil. This will give you an ironing guide to avoid having too-long or too-short curtains. Use this trick for the curtains you wash often Cheery Cherry on your budget!

CHEERFUL CONTEMPORARY good living is reflected in this beautiful furniture. It is really two rooms in one—sophisticated and yet informal —and made to order for today's living.

It has the warmth and charm redolent of the Great Houses of the Old Dominion. Like the finest Americana in museums and historic homes, it is worked in the cabinet maker's dream wood, SOLID WILD CHERRY . . . which never ages, but mellows and becomes more lovely as the years go by.

The classic simplicity of design blends with every style and decor, and "mixes" with every wood.

Yet for all its grand look and the honest hand workmanship that makes it truly heirloom quality, the price is more than surprisingly low. All the pieces shown above—18 of them—cost only about $1500*, and individual pieces are proportionately low priced.

This price is approximate and will vary somewhat in different localities.*

Protect net or filmy lace curtains in washing machine by putting each panel into a pillowcase and basting top of case shut. If you are going to dry curtain on a stretcher, baste a strip of cheesecloth or muslin around edge of curtain before tucking into pillowcase. Then you can fasten pins of stretcher into the cloth strip so pins won't catch the curtain

Or baste curtains to a sheet. This takes more time but allows free motion in the washing machine. If you have a curtain stretcher, fasten the pins into the sheet so you won't tear the fragile curtain. If you have no curtain stretcher, spread the curtain and sheet on terry-cloth towels to dry; the sheet will act as a guide for shaping and straightening the curtain

There's a special dye you can buy to pep up the ecru tone of curtains. Dissolve the dye in a saucepan of boiling water, add it to the last rinse water, and stir thoroughly. Add curtains, and swish them about in dye solution until they are the desired tint. Washing-machine action assures even tinting

Put curtains through wringer in straight lengthwise folds so they won't pull out of shape. When drying curtains on line, hang with generous overlap so corners won't be pulled by clothespins. Roll rayon curtains in a terry-cloth towel and iron them on wrong side while still slightly damp

How to wash and stretch curtains

To wash shower curtains—spread curtain flat, sponge a small area with warm suds, wipe with damp cloth, and dry with soft absorbent cloth. Or dip entire curtain into wash and rinse waters (but don't twist or wring the curtain). Hang curtain, unfolded, in the shade

A curtain stretcher which is adjustable to any size curtain is a valuable aid to curtain washing. Pin the upper right-hand corner of curtain first, next fasten lower right corner, then do the edge between as in the photograph. You'll notice that we've basted a cheesecloth strip around the edge of the curtain to fasten to the stretcher pin

Sash curtains may be hung in place at window while damp, and dried smooth by drawing a curtain rod through hem and pulling taut

How to iron curtains

Iron ruffles first. Then line u edges of hems, letting th ruffle extend, as in photc graph. Keep edges in plac with your free hand as yo guide iron with other hanc Place iron on a section c hemline until hem's about dry then lift iron to another section Dragging iron along wet her may stretch hem and make peaked corner. After ironing hem, run iron lightly over cur tain in short lengthwise sweeps Turn curtain and iron other hal in same way. Then unfold an apply finishing ironing touche

If you have an ironer, you'll be able to do ruffled curtains on it expertly. First, iron the casing top by running it along the edge of the ironer shoe. To iron the ruffles, roll the rounded edge of the ironer shoe into the gathers, release, and repeat. See photograph at right

Small pleats of narrow ruffle can be replaced by ironing them over a fork. Slip the ruffle between the tines of the fork. Space the pleats to suit. Press lightly, take out fork, and press firmly. Repeat until the entire ruffle is pleated. You gain speed as you go along

Fringe trimming on curtains or draperies may be straightened by brushing it with a clean whisk broom after it's washed. Don't run the fringed curtain through the wringer; it will flatten and tangle the fringe. When you are making or buying fringed curtains or washable draperies, be certain that the trim is color-fast. Otherwise it's necessary to rip the trim off and wash it separately—a lot of extra work

Fish Dinners

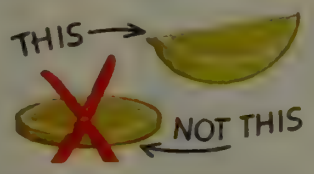
They can be marvelous—if you know these chef secrets!

Don't serve fish for economy's sake alone! It can be so wonderfully appetizing, if you prepare it properly. And, actually, that's easy as falling off a wharf. Just keep these points in mind:

1. When you buy your fish, make sure it's fresh: gills red, scales bright, flesh firm and elastic.

2. Fresh-frozen fish is excellent, too. (Just be sure you never let it thaw and then refreeze.)

3. Whether you bake, boil, broil or fry fish, rub both inside and out with fresh lemon juice. It's the perfect seasoning, and banishes most fish odor!



4. The biggest secret of fish cookery is:—Whatever recipe you use, don't overcook. That way you keep the rich juices and delicate flavor.

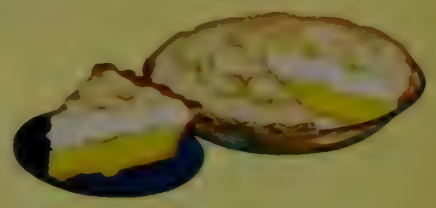
5. Baked fish sometimes tends to be dry. You can overcome that completely with this sauce. It's simple as can be, yet a real gourmet's delight:

FISH SAUCE A LA SUNKIST

½ cup mayonnaise
4 tbs. catsup
2 tbs. fresh lemon juice
2 tbs. chopped sweet pickle

Stir together, serve in bowl or pitcher. Serves 6-8.

6. No matter how you serve fish or sea food, garnish it with lemon. Every chef will tell you—"Lemon and fish—they were made for each other!" Serve your guests all the lemon they want. Not flat slices that are hard to squeeze, but thick, generous wedges and plenty of 'em. So that the tang of fresh lemon can enhance the flavor of every delectable morsel!



Good ideas from the Sunkist Kitchen

Another Lenten suggestion that's simple and delicious is this from the Sunkist Lemon Recipe Book (see below) :

PACIFIC COAST FISH SALAD

Combine: 2 cups flaked tuna or salmon; 2 cups shredded lettuce; ½ cup finely cut celery; 3 tablespoons minced pimiento; ½ cup Sunkist lemon pulp and juice. Serve with mayonnaise and lemon wedges.

FRESH LEMONS PROVIDE VERY SPECIAL HEALTH VALUES

Fresh lemons supply not only valuable amounts of vitamin B_1 but also rare vitamin P, and are among the richest known sources of vitamin C. Essential for youthful energy, sound teeth and gums, vitamin C is absent from most foods, scarce in most others. You need it daily. Whenever you add lemon you add health.

Have you discovered how fresh lemon juice livens the flavor of French dressing? Try it.

Partitions organize dresser-drawer space

Extra-high mahogany chest has 12 big drawers—enough drawer space for two persons, or as much storage as you'd get from an average chest plus a dresser. Stationary partitions in top four drawers help organize socks, gloves, handkerchiefs

Trim-lined walnut chest has two adjustable partitions in each of its three drawers. Close-up shows how you can move partitions back and forth to get the exact space you need for shirts or pajamas. Metal clips slide into grooves cut inside the front and back of the drawer. Wood dividers then fit snugly between each pair of clips

Well-planned drawers with permanent or adjustable partitions are an important feature of the new chests and vanities. Partitions fit the drawers to your exact storage needs, and help you to keep clothing and cosmetics in order. Here are some of the partition arrangements to look for.

Walnut vanity with four deep side drawers takes the load off dresser drawers. Built into the matching bench is a divided hosiery drawer which you can pull out while you're sitting on the bench. 1 cup RIVER BRAND or CAROLINA BRAND Rice, 1 tsp. salt, 1½ cups cold water. Wash thoroughly in 5 or 6 waters and place in 3 qt. pot with tight fitting cover. Place over moderate heat and bring to vigorous boil. This should take 8–10 min. When steam and foam begin to escape, turn heat down as low as possible and cook rice until tender—about 20 min. All water should be absorbed. Keep in warm place until ready to serve. Serves 5 to 6.

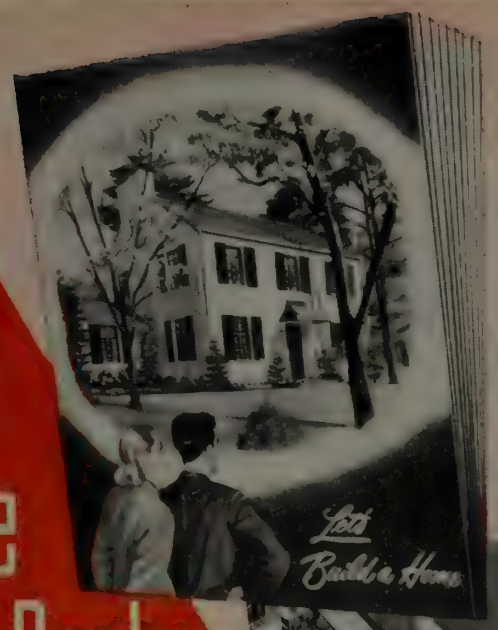
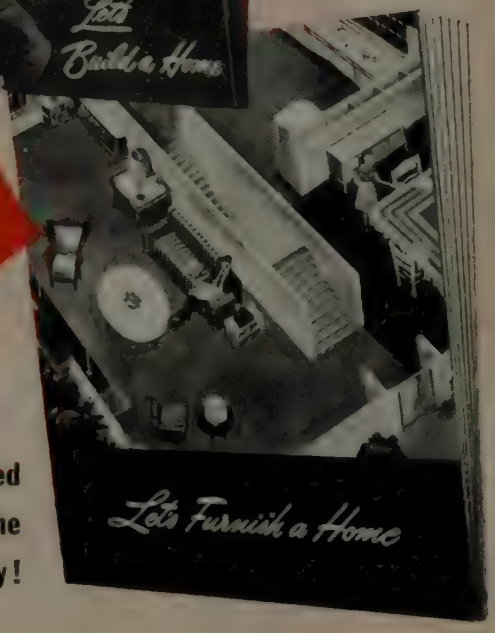
Q. My fireplace is badly off-center. How can I have a balanced furniture arrangement in my living room? Mrs. J. H., Stanford, Connecticut.



A. When your fireplace is off-center, plan a balanced furniture arrangement at the fireplace end of your room. Use the other end of the room for dining space, console tables or chests, a study group.



Set a good heavy piece of furniture—like a sofa or love seat—right opposite the fireplace. Don't even try to center the sofa on the wall or it will be out of line with the fireplace. Then arrange the room as a square or oblong around the sofa-fireplace balance.

Q. Do I need a fireplace or picture window to have a center of interest in my living room? Mrs. D. W., New Orleans, Louisiana.

A. No. Any handsome or unusual piece of furniture or group of furniture may easily become your room's center of interest. Just give it emphasis and added drama by arranging the rest of the room's furnishings around it. A sofa with a large picture above it, a group of matted prints over a radio console, a well-designed chair and end table, a piano, built-in bookshelves—any one of these makes a natural center of interest in a living room with no fireplace or picture window.

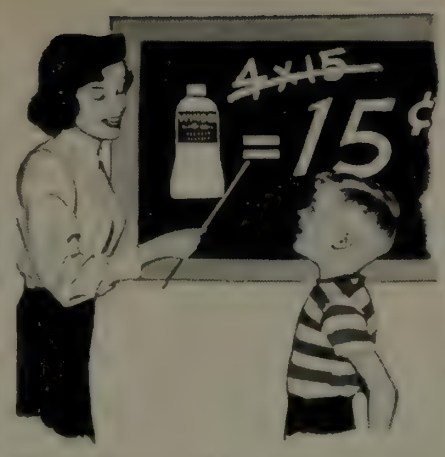
he's willing to give up bottle or breast-nursing entirely and take all his milk from a cup.

Baby may cling to one certain bottle feeding long after he has stopped demanding the others. Don't hurry him to give up this last bottle if it seems to comfort him. However, you can offer him milk from a cup before letting him have the bottle he wants. If he drinks some of the milk in the cup, decrease the amount in the bottle. After a time, he will take all his milk at that meal from his cup and will forget about the bottle entirely.

A breast-fed baby usually is weaned at about the eighth or ninth month. A bottle baby of this age may be harder to wean, particularly if he is in the habit of having a bottle in bed at nap and bedtimes. To avoid this difficulty mothers of bottle-fed babies should hold them in their arms for these feedings, instead of tucking baby in bed with his bottle.



If your baby balks at drinking from a cup, or refuses to give up any bottles or nursing periods at all, drop the matter for a month or so. Continue offering him an occasional sip from a little glass or cup. But keep the whole business on a friendly basis.

If your baby wants to hold the cup by himself, let him, even though he spills most of the milk. A small, 1-ounce glass may strike his fancy and will just fit his hand. From that, you can graduate him to a larger mug which he can hold in both hands. A colored glass or cup with an animal stencil may entice him, too.

When Baby is taking a fair amount of milk from the cup and doesn't seem particularly interested in his bottle, don't try to force the bottle on him just because you feel he isn't getting enough milk. You may only fix the bottle habit and make it more difficult to eliminate later. If he is drinking as much as 16 ounces of milk, is eating other foods well, and doesn't want his bottle, you're safe in banishing it.

Baby's own inclination is your guide in weaning. Don't worry if he's slow to change over; and don't be too smug if he seems to be accepting the new method without protest. He may backslide during a sick spell or when he's teething. Don't measure your baby's readiness by the time some other baby was completely weaned. Some babies don't lose their liking for milk from a bottle until they are 18 months, or older. Your baby may be one of these.

A table broiler cooks on the spot

Table-broiler meals are easy, and your guests enjoy watching and whiffing!

Hot snacks. Bring your broiler to the living room for hot snacks to accompany tomato juice or fruit juice. Let guests help themselves. Here we've broiled Crab Meat-Bacon Rolls and Cheese 'n' Rye Rounds

Crab Meat-Bacon Rolls

½ cup tomato juice
1 well-beaten egg
1 cup dry bread crumbs
⅛ teaspoon salt
Dash of pepper
½ teaspoon parsley, chopped
½ teaspoon chopped celery leaves
1 6½-ounce can crab meat, flaked
12 slices bacon, cut in half

Mix tomato juice and egg. Add crumbs, seasonings, parsley, celery leaves, and crab meat. Mix thoroughly; roll into finger lengths; wrap each roll with ½ slice bacon and fasten with toothpick. Broil, turning frequently to brown evenly. Makes about 2 dozen rolls.

Cheese 'n' Rye Rounds

Place a thin slice of American cheese on slice of rye bread. Sprinkle cheese with paprika and top round with a thin slice of dill pickle.

Bacon and eggs. Place bacon in rack. When it's done on one side, slide eggs into the special "islands." Turn rack and broil till bacon and eggs are done to your liking. In a matter of minutes, breakfast's ready

By Frances Meyer

You plug in a table broiler wherever an electric outlet's handy—dining room, buffet table, in front of the fireplace, on the porch or terrace. There it goes to work—steaks sizzle to a juicy finish, chops and fish broil, hot snacks and sandwiches toast, or bacon and eggs cook for breakfast.

Your family or guests will enjoy watching the broiler perform. And you'll be able to chat with them while the food cooks under your watchful eye. Ideas shown in pictures are practical, quick, and easy.

For best results, preheat broiler about 5 minutes. Plug the appliance into a wall outlet—don't use an extension cord. The cord increases the resistance to the current and decreases the amount of heat which is available. Don't plug another heating appliance into the same outlet.

How to take care of your table broiler

When it's new:

Follow the manufacturer's instructions for cleaning your broiler before it is used.

After each use:

1. Remove the heating coil, since it must not be immersed in water. It's self-cleaning—the high heat of the element will keep it burned free of fat. The reflector to which the heating element is attached may tarnish with use, but this will not interfere with the broiler's efficiency.

2. Wash all other parts of broiler thoroughly in mild, soapy water and use a mild cleanser if necessary to keep it as sparkling as when it was new. It's the burned-on fat which discolors the finish.

Broiled salmon steaks. Use your broiler for moist, delicately flavored fish steaks. Secrets of the moistness: quick cooking; frequent brushing with salad oil. Cover the lower rack with aluminum foil, turned up at the edges to hold in any drippings. Use low heat and broil about 6 minutes on each side. When the fish is broiled, fold over foil and toss away. Serve fish with Cucumber-Butter Sauce (see recipe below), French-fried potatoes, new peas, cabbage-pepper slaw, fruit sherbet, and cookies

Few drops Tabasco sauce
1 clove garlic, chopped, or ½ teaspoon chopped onion

Combine meat, seasonings, and water; mix well and form in patties. Combine remaining ingredients and simmer 5 minutes. One tablespoon chopped onion may be added to meat patties and catsup or chili sauce substituted for sauce. Broil on high heat, 3 inches below broiler unit, for 5 minutes; turn and broil till well done. Add sauce 2 or 3 minutes before removing patties. Makes 6 patties.

You can improve your home with picture windows

Like any other innovation, picture windows often are misused. Many houses have picture windows, but nothing to see outside; others have picture windows out of proportion to the rest of the house.

First requirement of a picture window is that it frame a view. The view may be expansive, or it may be intimate.

A picture window can be of any size or shape—but its dimensions must look well not only in the room from which you see the view, but also from the outside of your house. Your own personal taste and the style of your house will determine whether the window will be a single pane of glass or a combination of several small panes, and what shape your windows should be.

These illustrations show you some of the ways picture windows can be used to improve and brighten your home.

Where privacy is no problem, picture windows can give you a view in all directions, even through the house. But remember—you can't have a long view and privacy at the same time. Space below broad sills is a good spot for cabinets. Architect: H. Roy Kelley

A picture window can give you a winter scene as beautiful as a summer view, but glare must be controlled. Mullions above make square opening look vertical, hence can be used only on a room's long wall.

John Barry

You can combine picture windows with other types into a unit that gives you a picture and ventilation at the same time. Picture windows now are available in a limited number of stock sizes, in both wood and metal, conforming to standard window sizes

Large areas of glass add depth to a small room. A view through trees gives you excellent chance to use picture window, because seasonal changes in trees and hourly change in shadow patterns keep scene new

Sara Pryor, of Silver Spring, Maryland, tells how you can stretch your decorating dollars, with the help of Clara Dudley, your color-scheme consultant at Alexander Smith. Whether you're sixteen or pushing sixty, you do just as Sara did. Start with an Alexander Smith Rug and a budget. Clara Dudley will work out a color scheme just for you.

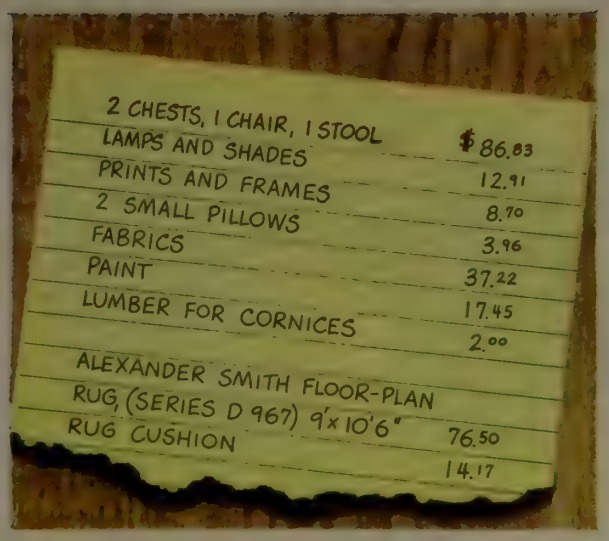
It's really neat to have parents like mine. When I was a child, I had junk all over my bedroom, and they never complained. And when I hit 16 and needed a grown-up room, I talked to Mommy and she talked to Dad and they gave me a budget and said to go ahead. I was petrified. But I knew enough to start with the rug, so I went to our beautiful new Hecht store in Silver Spring and found just exactly the rug I wanted.

Daddy and Mommy liked it too. It's a Floor-Plan Rug, made by Alexander Smith—9′ x 10′ 6″ to fit my room. It only cost $76.50, and I could have bought it on time. Hecht's told me about Clara Dudley, and gave me a Workshop Questionnaire which I sent in.



Clara Dudley sent me a Color-Scheme Plan with real samples, to go with my new rug.

The plan Clara Dudley suggested left me money to buy two chests, a stool, and chair.

Painting is fun, and it didn't take long. This is the wall color Clara Dudley suggested.

Neatest thing about Clara Dudley's plan was that she really took my budget seriously.

Floor-Plan Rugs come in lots of sizes. Mine almost covers my floor, just as it should.

Wouldn't you feel lucky with a room like this?

And wasn't I smart to start with an Alexander Smith Rug? I love to walk on it barefoot, it feels so luxurious. And wasn't Clara Dudley a wonder woman to show me just how to do it with the money I had to spend? If I ever get married, and have a whole house to do, I'll get Clara Dudley to help me. She makes it so easy for you to decorate even if you have only a little money to spend. She knows how!

Let Clara Dudley help you, too!

Discipline without dithers

How do schoolteachers keep large classes of youngsters under control when it's hard enough to manage a single boy or girl at home?

By June Johnson

Painless discipline of boys and girls is something every parent seeks. One person who can help, perhaps, is that paid disciplinarian, the public schoolteacher.

Have you visited a modern classroom? When teaching conditions are at least fair (that is, not too many pupils per class, adequate seating, and the like) you will find that an efficient teacher maintains her discipline without her pupils being aware of it. Most of the time the pupils don't even know they're being disciplined or controlled.

There are classroom methods you can copy to make discipline at home a painless procedure:

Maintain your child's interest

If you guide him in his early years—without supervising his every move—he will learn how to plan his own amusements. A good teacher sees to it that her students have no time for mischief. Enlarging upon this thought, it is better to take your youngster's mind off mischief by interesting him in something else than constantly to forbid.

Never threaten something you can't carry out

A teacher quickly learns that an empty threat lowers class morale and her own prestige. At school or at home children soon realize that an elder who constantly warns that they will be flunked (at home it's spanked) doesn't mean it, and they go merrily unchecked by the words. Before threatening, ask yourself if you really mean to do it, and if so, if it will accomplish the desired result.

Don't take Johnny to the principal

At home this means don't depend on dad for all the discipline! Your boy or girl should recognize each parent, just as he recognizes each teacher, as the final authority in all but the most serious matters. He will not only obey more readily, but will have a better feeling for his dad. Dad's under a disadvantage to begin with, because he's around the children less. It is unfair to make him responsible for the unpleasant job of settling daytime disputes. A principal considers a teacher who sends all problems to him as a weak sister; so is the mother who relies on dad for discipline.

Don't bicker with a youngster

Your aim is to improve him, not lower yourself.

Be friendly, and human, one with your family

Does this sound odd? Perhaps you are one who can truly say, "Of course, I'm friendly. I love them, don't I?" But if you need proof that real friendliness is not always present, look around you—at families so absorbed, each member in his own interests, that they have no [Turn to page 275 of the total number of mortgages recorded—today they represent about 13 percent. T. B. King, director, loan guaranty service, Veterans Administration, attributes the decline largely to the inability of many veteran families to buy homes at current prices. There was a time when the $4,000 maximum guaranty on a G.I. loan was frequently accepted by lenders in lieu of down payment. Now, with costs rising, most lenders are requiring a larger down payment. This requirement, coupled with the 4 percent G.I. interest rate, has eliminated many veterans from the home market, even though their incomes may be more than sufficient to let them make reasonable monthly payments on homes. As a result, the great majority of veterans has not been able to take advantage of its G.I. loan benefits.

In some sections, a combination F.H.A.-G.I. loan is playing an important part in getting homes for former servicemen. Under that system, an F.H.A.-insured first mortgage is taken out, at a 4½ percent interest rate. Then a second mortgage is taken out, under the 4 percent G.I. rate. This second mortgage does not exceed 20 per cent of the G.I. appraisal figure, or sales price. For example, on a $10,000 house, an F.H.A. loan

Types of F. H. A. loan insurance you'll be interested in

Title I—Property improvements

Lending institutions are insured against loss up to 10 percent of the aggregate amount of all the loans they make under Title I. Most Title I loans other than Class 3 are not secured by a lien or mortgage. A cash down payment of 10 percent of the cost of the improvements is required on Class I loans. Title I insurance is limited to loans made on or before June 30, 1949.

Type of loan	Type of improvement	Maximum maturity	Maximum amount	Maximum financing charge
Class 1 (a)	Normal repair, alteration, or improvement of an existing structure to keep it habitable and in sound working condition	3 years 32 days	$2,500	$5 discount per $100 per year
Class 3	Construction of a new home	20 years 5 months	$4,500 first mortgage (5 percent equity required)	4½ percent interest on declining balance plus ½ of 1 percent insurance charge annually on original principal amount; or equivalent charge on discount basis

Title II—Permanent mortgage insurance program

Mortgages on both new and existing homes are insured under this section. The mortgage transaction must be economically sound and the mortgage amount is limited by the F.H.A. estimate of appraised value. The valuation is based on the price which a typical buyer is warranted in paying for the property for long-term use or investment. Classes listed below must be approved for mortgage insurance before construction starts.

Type of property	Type of borrower	Maximum mortgage amount	Maximum percent of appraised value	Maximum maturity
1- to 4-family	Owner-occupant, or long-term investor	$16,000	80	25 years
1-family	Owner-occupant	6,300	90	25 years
1-family	Owner-occupant	9,500	90 percent of first $7,000, 80 percent of remainder up to $11,000	25 years would be taken out for $7,000, at 4½ percent interest. The second, G. I., mortgage would amount to $2,000, at 4 percent interest. The borrower has to make a down payment of only $1,000. Some lending agencies will not accept this type of paper, because of the amount of bookwork and servicing it requires.

Part of the inflation the home seeker faces today results from the liberal credit terms which have been made available to homebuyers through government guarantees. The Veterans Administration recognizes that the G.I. loan itself contributes to the inflationary influences pushing housing prices upward. It has, as a consequence, urged veterans to exercise restraint and to buy only in case of real need.

Will the house you want to buy meet requirements of F.H.A.?

The table below shows the monthly repayment costs of F.H.A.-insured mortgages ranging from $1,000 to $16,000.

To be eligible for F.H.A. insurance, mortgages must be written in multiples of $100, except some cases in which the amount may be in an even multiple of $50. Interest must not exceed 4½ percent, and the mortgage must be paid off in monthly installments. The insurance costs ½ of 1 percent additional. Payments shown in the table include interest, principal, and the F.H.A. insurance premium.

Where the mortgage amount is $6,000 or less, mortgage insurance may be had up to 95 percent of the total value. The term may run for 30 years.

Houses and lots appraised by the F.H.A, at $7,000 or less are eligible for F.H.A.-insured mortgages of as much as 90 percent of the total value. These mortgages may run as long as 25 years.

In the $7,000 to $11,000 range, a house and lot are eligible for an F.H.A-insured mortgage of as much as 90 percent of the first $7,000, plus 80 percent of anything over $7,000.

To be eligible for such a loan, the F.H.A. commitment must be issued before construction is started; the house must comply with F.H.A. minimum property requirements; it must be for the occupancy of the owner only; and the house must pass three inspections during construction.

For houses and lots appraised at more than $11,000, the maximum mortgage may be as large as 80 percent of the value. This type of mortgage may run as long as 25 years, if the house complies with requirements listed in the above paragraph. The maximum loan cannot be more than $16,000 under any circumstances.

Include your garage in your garden plans

By Lou Richardson

Don't let your gardening stop this side of the garage. Too many people treat their garages as they once did their woodsheds—places necessary for hiding things but to be otherwise ignored.

You get double benefits if you make your garage part of your garden. For one thing, you turn it from a box into an attractive building. For another, you gain valuable planting or playing space—and all of us can use an extra bit of room.

On this and following pages are suggestions for making use of both front and sides of your garage. They are only a few of the many possibilities. Your own ingenuity will suggest others.

Climbing roses turn a garage entrance into a bower. The fences and tire strips now lead to a center of interest instead of to a dead end. There are other vines you can use in the same way, and you can get this effect in a hurry with annual vines like morning-glories or gourds

Garage front doubles as a garden wall. On one side the vine (euonymus is a good choice) follows and softens architectural lines. Shasta daisies on right make an avenue of the driveway. Don't plant woody shrubs near driveway; they may scratch the finish of your car

Paint joins with planting to dress up a garage. Brick-red walls with white trim brighten this New England type of building, while fence, ox-bow over doors and post lamp make it seem more a carriage house than a car shelter. Forsythia in fence corner gives a needed accent

Your paintbrushes

- ✓ How to use them
- ✓ How to buy them
- ✓ How to care for them

By Ken Murray and Bob Jones

When you buy good paintbrushes, you are making a sound investment. Bargain brushes are the most expensive, for they cause painting failures.

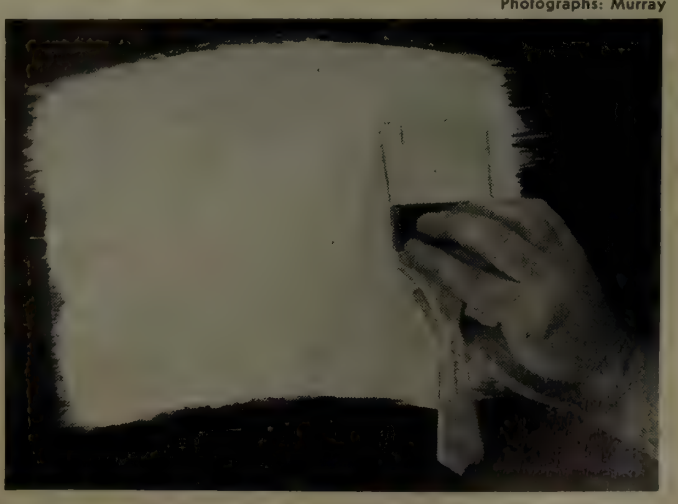
A good brush will hold more paint, carry it without dripping, paint without spattering, put on a smoother coat, and cut a clean edge. It can be cleaned again and again for future painting jobs.

The best brushes are made of hog bristles or of durable man-made bristles like nylon. Both can be used with all common finishes, except that nylon bristles will soften in shellac or alcohol. If that happens, put the nylon bristles in boiling water for 30 minutes and hang the brush up to dry overnight.

Good brushes are expensive. The photographs will help you make sure a brush is good, use it to best advantage, and give it the care it deserves.

Dip only half the length of bristle into paint or enamel (left). Deeper dipping wastes paint and ruins brush by letting hardened paint accumulate in the heel. Next, lightly slap off excess paint against the side of the container (above) so the brush won't drip. If you paint a ceiling and paint runs down your arm, you have a poor brush or are carrying too much paint

Lay on paint with light, short, slightly curved strokes (left). Lift brush gradually so you don't leave a thick edge of paint. Grip only handle and metal ferrule; if you touch bristle, the brush will wear rapidly. Apply paint only with end of bristle, and reverse it often



Photographs: Murray

1. Apply enamel or varnish with short, light strokes, letting the finish flow together with as little brushing as possible

2. After a square is coated, press brush dry and go over the square

3. Dry brush again and cross-brush square. Watch enamel or varnish for half-an-hour to catch runs or sags before they dry

Flat wall paint will flow together; don't go back over it. Lay paint on heavily. Start each brushful on bare wall, working back to overlap preceding square. Paint narrow bands from ceiling to floor so the edges won't dry out and show up as lap marks in paint

Brush outside oil paint well into wood. Hard work pays. Use long, straight strokes, brushing until you have a coat of uniform thickness. Lift the brush gradually at the end of the stroke to feather out edge

Don't poke paint into corners with a good brush. With practice, you can ease paint into a corner by drawing the brush out gently. If you have places to paint that can't be reached without poking, keep an old brush handy especially for job

Always use the flat side of a brush, even when you paint a narrow strip (left). Painting with edge makes brush divide into clumps (top right) If clumps are left in a brush overnight, they'll take a permanent set. If you have much narrow work, get an angular sash brush (lower right)

How to choose a paintbrush

Get a brush for each kind of finish; you don't want pigment showing up in varnish. Pictured, left to right, are: sash brush for narrow edges; 2-inch brush for trim; oval brush for fine work; chisel-edged brush for varnish or enamel; flat, straight-edged brush for walls or painted floors

To check quality of an animal-bristle brush, spread bristle (left) and look for "flags" or split ends. The more split ends, the better the brush, for they aid in holding paint and spreading it in an even film

Try to find a brush that is not too coarse or fanned out at the painting end. The bristle should be springy and elastic when you press it against the back of your hand (right). For painting large areas, get bristles 3 or 4 inches in width and length

By separating bristle, you can see if there is a plug strip. Sometimes narrow wooden strips are used to improve the working qualities. But if a cheap brush has a thick strip in the heel, it probably was used to decrease the amount of bristle needed. Such brushes do not hold enough paint, hence are not good values

How to prepare a new brush

Most new brushes have a few loose bristles that weren't anchored. You can remove these by rolling the handle rapidly between the palms of your hands (left), thus throwing out the loose bristles. Or you can bend the bristle across your fingers (right) so you achieve the same result.

Don't put a new brush directly into paint, or the pigment will be very difficult to remove from the bristle. Instead, suspend the brush in linseed oil for at least 12 hours (left). When you are ready to use the brush, squeeze out as much oil as you can with a wood strip (right). . . .

Next, whirl the brush inside a container to force out remaining linseed oil (left). When you have combed the bristle straight (right), the brush is ready for use. Even at that, a brush isn't at its best until it is well broken in, a reason for buying good brushes and taking care of them

How to clean a paintbrush

Never let a paintbrush stand on its bristles. Never leave it in water. Clean it after each job. Use the proper thinner: turpentine, followed by naphtha or mineral spirits, for oil paint, enamel, or varnish; alcohol, for shellac or alcohol stain (but not with nylon brushes); lacquer thinner for lacquers. Soak brush in the thinner, working it against the container

Squeeze bristle to work out paint (left). Work from ferrule to end of bristle. Repeat several times, rinsing the brush in fresh thinner. In obstinate cases, work out pigment with wire brush. It may take two quarts of thinner, but thinner may be saved in a sealed container and used again

If the thinner treatment is not sufficient, wash the brush with a mild soap and water at body temperature, and rinse in clear water. Then squeeze the water from the brush between two dowel rods, as pictured, or whirl brush dry in a container

Comb brush lightly, so inside bristles are straight (left). Let brush dry wrapped in a square of cleansing tissue to shape it. Remove tissue and wrap in heavy paper (right), using care not to bend bristle. Naphthalene crystals (center) will protect brush from moths. Store in a cool, dry place

How to salvage a neglected brush

You can make a neglected brush usable. Soak it in turpentine or liquid brush cleaner for a day or two, occasionally working the bristles to loosen paint. Use a scraper to remove old paint. Then soak brush for several hours in hot, soapy water

Next, sprinkle soap powder on an old-fashioned washboard and rub the brush across it, using the same motion used in washing clothes. Hold brush as pictured, first rubbing the corners to loosen up the bristle

When the bristle is loosened at the corners, place brush flat on the board and press it firmly with the other hand as you continue rubbing. Dip the brush into hot water, reverse it, and continue rubbing with additional soap powder. If bristle remains stiff, try sand with soap

Finally, rinse the brush in cold water until all traces of soap and paint have been removed from the bristle and the rinse water remains clear. Comb the bristle and dry it. Salvaged brushes are usable, but they are not nearly so good as a brush that has been given the proper care from the beginning

Five ways you can use the last of the loaf

By Ruth Hatheway

BREAD in the breadbox several days old? How about transforming it into chocolate bread pudding, hot French toast, bread cutouts toasted with cinnamon and brown sugar, bread sticks toasted with cheese, or bread cubes buttered to top a casserole? Each picture below shows you one good way to use the last of the loaf.

Chocolate Bread Pudding is baked in fluted cupcake liners set in muffin pans. Top with meringue during the last 10 minutes of baking. Or bake pudding in individual custard cups, cool, unmold, and serve with whipped cream. Garnish with shaved chocolate. Recipe is on page 168

French Toast, orange-flavored, is served here with asparagus. Combine ¼ cup orange juice, 1 teaspoon grated orange peel, 2 well-beaten eggs, ¼ teaspoon salt, and ¾ cup milk. Dip bread slices in mixture and fry in hot fat until golden brown. Cut toast ring for asparagus bundle with a doughnut cutter. Snip one side and slip over asparagus. Grate a little orange peel into melted butter; pour over the asparagus

Toast the last of the loaf

Bread Cutouts are star performers for child's party. Toast cutouts, butter, and sprinkle with brown sugar and cinnamon. They make a speedy garnish for puddings, custards, applesauce. For two dozen cutouts, you'll need about ⅓ cup brown sugar and ½ teaspoon cinnamon

Cheesed Bread Sticks are crunchy tidbits to serve with tomato juice, soup, or salad. Remove crusts from day-old bread; cut bread into strips. Spread bread strips with either softened butter or fortified margarine, then roll in grated Parmesan cheese, and toast lightly in oven or broiler

Bread Cubes tossed in the skillet with melted butter or fortified margarine make a crisp casserole topping, add a festive touch to cream soups. Vary the flavor distinctively by sprinkling basil, marjoram, savory, or chopped parsley into the fat before adding the bread cubes

MRS. M. COCHRANE COLE

GIVE MOTHER a Craftspun* Dinner Cloth for HER DAY! This gorgeous modern design will give fresh interest to Mother's traditional china and silver. Later the plant can be put in the garden for use next season.

Craftspun Cloths are equally suited to formal entertaining or family dinners. They're easy to care for because they never wrinkle and spots sponge off. Mother will enjoy using her cloth year in and year out. Since it's firmly woven, it can be washed easily or sent to the laundry—needs no pressing. THE BROADLOOM RUG WITH THE LATEX BACK

We put our wood lot in our house

By Mrs. F. T. Heinzen

BEFORE

AFTER. This is our farmhouse after three years of spare-time work. Lumber from our wood lot provided new wide siding, an extension to the kitchen, and a new, better proportioned roof for the kitchen wing

Eight years ago we bought a run-down farmhouse in the foothills of the Berkshire mountains near Albany, New York, for $2,000. With it went 45 acres of tillable land, and 15 acres of wood lot.

Now there are fewer trees in the wood lot: Much of the white pine and hemlock has gone into remodeling the house. But real estate and insurance men currently appraise our property at $18,000. Our own hands made the difference.

There was much wrong with the farmhouse we started with: It was too small; the roof leaked; it was poorly arranged; it had small windows in the wrong places; the sill and one wall of the kitchen were rotten; and the siding needed replacing. [Turn to next page

Photographs: United Picture Service

Here's a view of our house from the rear. We built a porch, 40 by 7 feet, which stretches across the back of the house. We carried the cement for its floor in buckets from the mixer to the forms. I leveled it, but it was no fun after the first seven square feet! Now we're starting the landscaping

We put our wood lot in our house

At first, we planned to hire workmen to make the repairs. That proved impossible. So we decided to do the work ourselves—my husband, brother-in-law, and myself. Even my 14-year-old son was able to help some. When we started we had no idea that it would take all our free time for three years, including vacations.

Our first job was to get lumber to work with. The first winter we felled and hauled to the mill logs from which 11,434 feet of lumber were milled. We hired a man to fell the trees, but my husband and I trimmed them. Because of miscalculation, we had to do a similar job the next winter, when we had another 8,174 feet of lumber milled. Although we had some left over, the lumber cost us only $1,044. It would have cost about $3,000 to buy.

After our first season of lumbering, we went to work on the house. First we took the old shingles from the main part of the house, replaced two rotten boards, removed a chimney, then put on tar paper and asphalt shingles. We had some outside help with the roof. That done, we went about tearing down partitions and taking off all the old plaster inside. Then we put ceilings in the upstairs bedrooms and erected new partitions. Painting the walls, and putting on new flooring, followed. After the downstairs partitions were removed, we began outside.

We closed off an old stairway to the cellar, and replaced it with a window. Then we poured concrete for the 7- by 20-foot porch floor in front, the 7- by 40-foot floor for the back porch, the base for the fireplace, the step at the living-room entrance and the foundation for the extension to the kitchen. This would cost $350 if done by professionals. It cost us $68 for cement, gravel, and sand—plus a terrific backache!

After the concrete work, we took off the old siding, and started putting in the remaining windows. The carpenter (he worked only 10 days, but was very good about showing us how to proceed on our own) put in five windows and replaced the old front entrance with another window. We took the kitchen wing apart, ripping off the old roof and attic floor, and tearing off the front wall. Then we put up a new wall and nailed it to the main part of the house.

"Now, Junior, eat your spinach."

One day the carpenter laid out a pattern for the rafters. Then he looked at his watch. "Noontime," he said, "gotta get that hay in before it rains. You have 22 of these rafters ready to go up tomorrow morning and I'll be there." They were ready, though it took three of us to saw them out.

After that we roofed the kitchen wing, and put on the new siding, made window frames for the kitchen and back porch, and put in the windows. We were able to put the floor stringers and subfloor boards in the kitchen before we ran out of lumber and had to wait for more to be cut and milled.

When spring came, we began the trim inside, upstairs and down. New downstairs flooring followed, then the fireplace: The fireplace material cost us $105—the contractor's price was $500.

Then my husband and I made the kitchen cabinets, and finished the downstairs walls (the kitchen and living room in knotty pine) after putting in more electric light outlets, wall switches, and an electric range outlet.

The plumbing was a major job. We piped our water from a spring and had to install a septic tank as well as the fixtures indoors.

Our records show a total cash outlay of $6,300. That covers the original $2,000 we paid for the farm, plus materials and labor not done by ourselves.

We have figured out the amount we saved by doing the work ourselves this way:

My husband, at carpenter's rates of $1.25 an hour	$2,570
His brother, at helper's wages of $1 an hour	2,056
Myself, at 50 cents an hour	1,028
Total	$5,654

Besides the saving in money, we have learned a lot. Now we can't see the sense of hiring help for anything.

"It takes a heap of living to make a home. This is one of our best heaps."

Is your Hot Water AUTOMATIC?

You can rely on hot water 'round the clock with an automatic water heater . . .

By R. E. James

Rheem Engineering Consultant

An automatic water heater never stops. It keeps enough hot water on hand 24 hours a day to supply every tap and washing machine in your house. Without waiting. Without varying water temperature. Without your going near it.

It is the most essential appliance in the house. And it should be selected with utmost care and consideration. A competent plumber will help guide you as to the correct size, fuel and model for your home.

The facts illustrated here will help you to understand water heater values. But your best safeguard is the name Rheem, leader in style and performance—world's largest maker.

Rheem automatic water heaters and other home comfort appliances are merchandised through selected wholesale distributors to your nearby plumbing and heating dealer.

3. Good Heart . . . The tank is the heart of your heater. Only the Rheem tank is made by the *patented Rheem-Process. Warranted against leaks and corrosion. Some models have a magnesium rod for additional protection. *Pat. No. 2444833

How to set your table

By Fae Rowley

You can have a smart table with either elaborate settings or the most inexpensive accessories. The trick is neatness: knives and forks, plates and glasses lined evenly with each other and with the edge of the table.

The rules for placing your table silver are based on convenience for those seated at the table. See pictures.

Breakfast. Teaspoons at right of knife are for coffee and soft-cooked egg; knife and fork are for ham, bacon, or sausage. For cereal, replace inside teaspoon with soup or dessert spoon. Butter knife is placed on butter plate—vertically or horizontally. Other silver is 1 inch from table edge

Do you know that

. . . A dessert spoon is a size larger than a teaspoon?

. . . The dessert spoon is also the proper spoon for soup or cereal service?

. . . A luncheon fork is correct for dessert service?

. . . A salad fork also can be used for dessert?

. . . A luncheon knife is used as a salad knife when head lettuce is served in wedges that need cutting?

. . . Knives, forks, and spoons are called flatware?

. . . Silver serving dishes, goblets, and candlesticks are called hollow ware?

Photographs: Stanley

Luncheon. Salad fork is placed inside luncheon fork—salad will be served with luncheon course. If salad is to be served first, salad fork is placed outside luncheon fork. If you're serving salad and sandwiches together on luncheon plate, you'll need only salad fork on left and coffee spoon on right. If soup is served for luncheon, coffee is usually brought in with or after the dessert

Informal dinner. Each piece is placed in the order it will be used, from the outside in—soup spoon on the outside for the first course, teaspoon for sherbet, creamed vegetables, or coffee in the main dinner course. The salad fork is placed inside the dinner fork when salad is served with dinner or after main dinner course

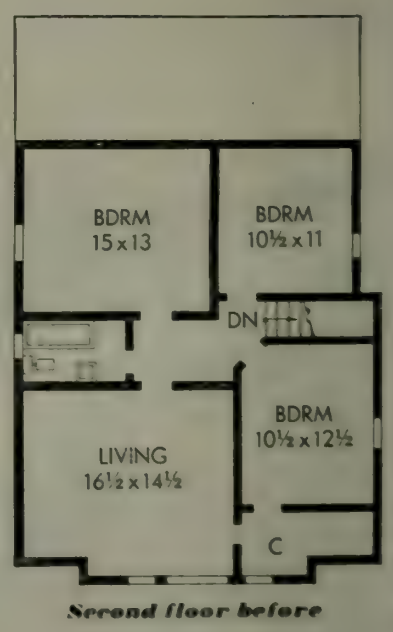
It's better to have too much

Is space what you need, though your budget is small? Your best bet is probably to buy an old house or barn. There you will find space, usually sound construction, and a need for improvement. By remodeling you can turn that space into a comfortable home.



When the C. R. Boyntons went looking for space, they found it in a former carriage house at the rear of a big lot in Oak Park, Illinois. The house was badly outmoded in ap-

Before—Old carriage houses like this went out of style as fast as the carriages themselves, similar to the one you see here. The lines of the house were bad, but there was plenty of space inside it. This photograph was taken about 1890 pearance, but the Boyntons were more interested in an attractive home inside than a beautiful exterior.

Architect W. Lockwood Martling, Jr., wrought the change. A finished exterior remodeling job would have been costly, so the outside was modified as much as possible at as little expense as possible. Major changes were made inside, as you can see by studying the "before" and "after" plans and photographs on these pages.

After—Rather than tear the building apart, lines were improved with a minimum of changes. The garage addition and grayed paint tones make the house seem lower. White trim around windows keeps your eye off high roof peak

Before—This will give you an idea of the interior just as the Boyntons found it—sturdy structural members, a good foundation and floor, not much light, but plenty of space. Ceiling was high, so floor was raised and pipes and ducts set below

After—As light as a solarium is the new living room. A wide bay, with a fixed window in the center and a pair of casements at either end, replaced old garage doors. Draperies slide into recessed boxes at each end of window. Ceiling beams are false, were added merely for effect

Living-room walls opposite the bay are random-width, V-grooved pine paneling with a satin finish. Stairway railing is a simple Early American design in keeping with the flavor of the house. The entire wall is purposely nonsymmetrical; opening in the fireplace is even off center

How to cover a counter wi

Following this step-by-step guide, you can give your kitchen counters, new or old, a long-lasting surface at low cost

Is the linoleum on your kitchen counters worn or cracked? Has water worked in and loosened the paste?

With care and patience, you can replace such linoleum yourself. Or, if you remodel, you can use the same techniques to put linoleum on new counter tops. You'll save a substantial sum by doing the work yourself.

There are, however, several precautions you should take and limits you should recognize.

First, don't try to lay linoleum in a cold room.

Second, line up the right tools before you start.

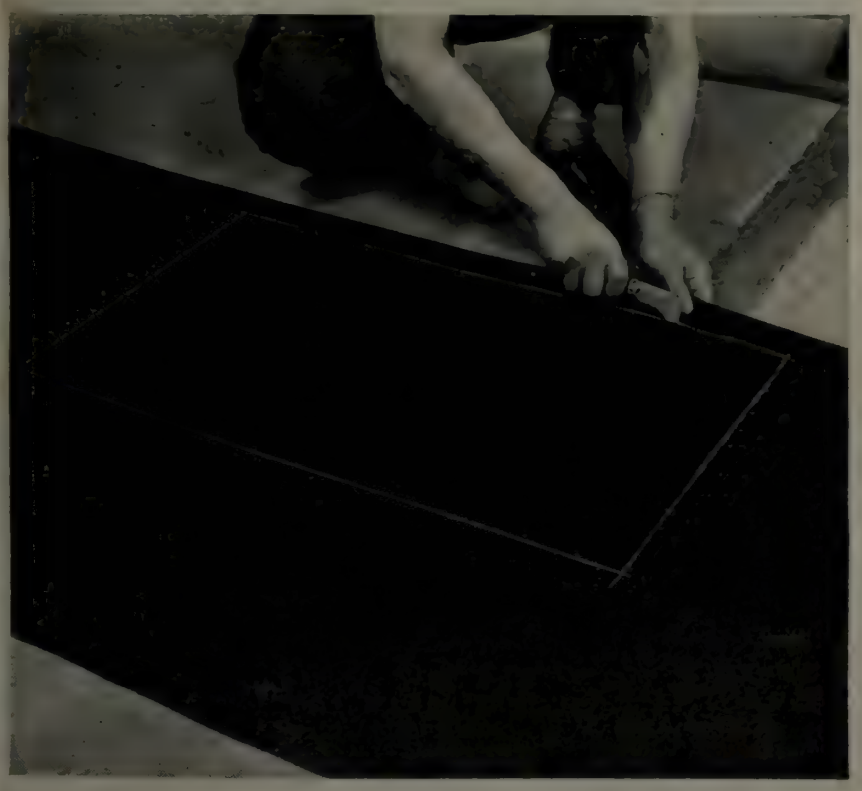
Third, don't try to use battleship-weight linoleum. Its thickness will fight you from start to finish in coving, in fitting, and in cutting. Plain counter tops, where all the fitting required is for straight outside edges, are easy to do with battleship linoleum. But for all the wear it will get, you'll find lightweight material long-wearing, cheaper, and easier to handle.

The most urgent warning is this: If you feel any qualms before you begin, don't attempt a coved job, where the one piece of linoleum continues up the wall. Instead, make it a two-piece installation, one piece for the flat surface and another for the vertical. You can buy a trim strip for the two meeting edges to fit into.

Linoleum usually comes in six-foot rolls, from which the dealer will cut the linear amount you want. In the same shop you can buy the necessary tools, adhesive, and metal or plastic stripping to hold the linoleum in place.

Photographs: Philip Fein

Here is a partly finished sink cabinet ready for linoleum. Counter top is 3/4-inch plywood, wall cove 3/8-inch plywood. When you replace old linoleum, strip it off, remove old trim, and clean wood base with steel wool dipped in water (ordinary paste) or gasoline (waterproof paste)



with linoleum

By Bob Gilmore

You'll need these special tools

Special tools you'll need for this job include carpenter's dividers for outside scribing of contours, underscriber for marking inside contours (top), linoleum knife, and a paste spreader. Plus the paste, of course. You should also have on hand a hammer, screwdriver, nail set, pocket knife, pliers, combination square, hacksaw, marking pencil, file, steel measuring tape, tin snips, carpenter's square, and putty knife

Linoleum, warmed overnight in an 80-degree room, has been cut roughly to size, with enough overlap for final trimming. Sink opening is being cut, slightly smaller than actual size. Use a board under linoleum as cutting surface. For complicated cutting, use linoleum felt pattern

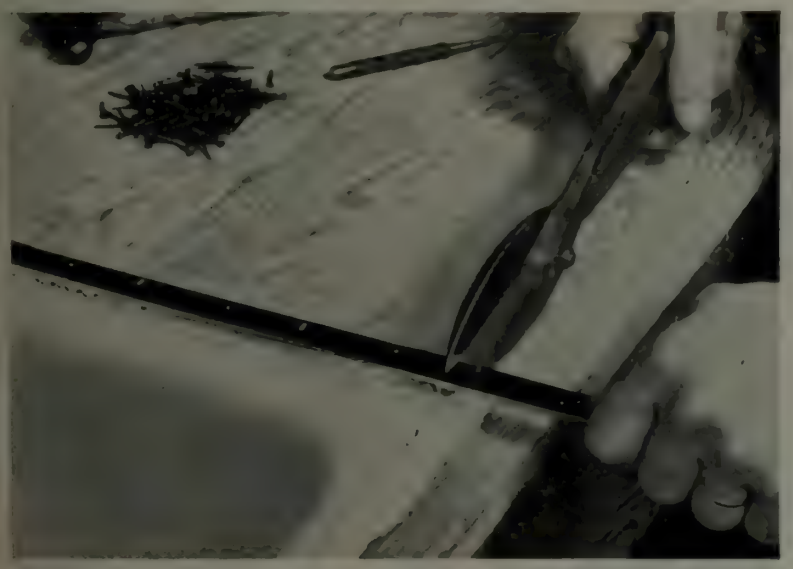
Fitting the

Trim strips should be placed around the outside edges of the counte first. Here a combination square (giving a 45-degree angle) and sharp nail are being used to mark the horizontal nailing surface of th trim. Do this before cutting to bend around a right-angle outside corne

Marked, the metal trim strip is being cut with tin shears before it is bent. The section being removed makes a perfect 90-degree triangle, to allow a right-angle bend without overlapping. Careful fitting of the trim is essential if you want your job to have that professional look



Here the metal trim strip, already nailed in place along the range edge of the counter (left), has been bent at the notched portion to fit around the corner. A small block of soft wood, struck with a hammer, forces the trim tightly into place. Don't hammer on the trim itself; you'll mar it

...netal trim

...o cut off trim strip at a right angle, first snip through horizontal part ...th your tin shears. Then use the corner of a file, as shown, to cut a ...ore in the vertical face. Finally, break the trim by bending the strip ...ack and forth at the score. Then file the ends clean and square

Trim around the sink has been measured, nailed at one end, and is now being cut before bending. On an inside corner, only a single snip is needed. Make this snip only into nailing portion, leaving rounded rim uncut for bending. Note non-drying calking compound under strip

To bend trim, hold it firmly in both hands and force it around corner. For a more gradually curved corner, make several snips, then force the curve around some round object of the same curvature. Better still—and a great deal easier—would be to nail a ready-made rim in place

▼ marks the spot for a built-in telephone outlet

That little triangle, marked on the plans for your new home, will help protect the beauty of fine walls and woodwork. It shows your builder the locations where you will want telephones. It enables him to provide for concealed telephone wires leading to built-in telephone outlets.

If he knows the locations in advance, he simply installs outlet boxes and then connects them with a few sections of pipe or tubing inside the walls while construction is in progress. Later, when telephones are installed, the wires can be run through these raceways to each instrument.

Trimming linoleum

With all trim in place, linoleum is scribed and cut for an exact fit. This is how an underscriber (right) works: The bottom part follows the contour being duplicated by the needle above it. The needle is adjustable. With the linoleum in place and edges trimmed, outline of sink trim is marked (above) before the cutting

Where linoleum must be fitted around pipes, fixtures, or other irregular objects, a pair of carpenter's dividers can be used to transfer exact contour to the linoleum. Here a strip of linoleum has been placed along the top of the range back, about one inch above the position it will occupy when cut to fit. The dividers are being set at the exact distance

Dividers set, the exact outline of the range back is being scribed on the linoleum. Dividers always should be held firmly at right angles to the object being followed. Cut on the scribed line with a linoleum knife

Applying the linoleum

With trim strips installed and linoleum cut, lay linoleum aside an spread adhesive over surface to be covered. Professionals use waterproo cement on a two-inch strip around sink, ordinary paste elsewhere. Bu you'll find it little more expensive to use waterproof paste exclusivel

Here, adhesive was first spread only on counter. Linoleum was laid in place, flattened, and rolled into a tight fit. Then paste was put on cove and linoleum rolled up to eliminate air bubbles. Professionals paste all areas, fit linoleum into trim, let natural stiffness force it down in place

Sandbagging, say some professionals, is essential to hold linoleum flat until the adhesive has set (overnight). Half of this counter (pictured) was sandbagged, the other half unweighted. There seemed to be little difference. To be absolutely sure, use sandbags. But it's heavy work

Why should a Woman care about CORNER POSTS

That post between windshield and door holds one corner of the roof over your head—so it has to be strong for safety's sake.

But a wide, heavy corner post means a "blind spot" in your vision—makes it hard to see other cars swinging out of driveways ahead of you, or children running into the street. And that's not good from the safety standpoint.

But—look at the 1949 Body by Fisher—and see the happy answer smart engineering has come up with! That post is every bit as strong as before, but far narrower—easier for you to see around.

This is but one of the many examples of the solid, enduring, built-in superiority of every Body by Fisher.

Slam the doors—run the windows up and down—test the seats for soft, resilient riding comfort. You'll find you can hear the difference, feel the difference, see the difference when it's Body by Fisher.

And remember—only a car built by General Motors can boast of such extra values—because only General Motors cars have Body by Fisher.

RIDE ON A RUBBER CLOUD

In your next car, choose a Body by Fisher with foam rubber cushions — and make a happy discovery! They'll never sag, mildew, nor absorb dampness. They'll take all the beating an active family can hand out — yet stay in handsome shape to welcome your guests.

For in Fisher Body's foam latex seats you ride literally on air — on millions of tiny bubbles. Gently buoyed, insulated from road hum and vibration, you float — on a cloud of rubber.

Body by Fisher — BETTER THAN EVER !

Repairing linoleum

To repair errors in your work, first file or scrape off tiny grains of linoleum (left). Then mix them with varnish until you get a thick paste. Use tapered knife blade for placing this linoleum dough into cracks and crevices (right). Force the dough in tight, smooth it off, and let it dry for a day or two before a final smoothing with steel wool and oil. Your patch will be almost invisible

To remove scratches or polish repairs in the finished surface, use a pad of the finest steel wool you can get, dipped in boiled linseed oil. Rub with even pressure and a smooth, circular motion until marks have been removed. Then wipe off the oil and wash the entire counter with a mild soap solution, using a cloth wrung almost dry. Some professionals advocate an immediate coat of clear, plastic linoleum finish, while others recommend a weekly polishing with a good paste wax for protection

Flowering hormone found

Plant breeders are enormously excited by the possibilities in the discovery recently announced by Dr. R. H. Roberts of the University of Wisconsin of the flowering hormone which he calls florigen. It will be some little time before home gardeners can buy this as a product with which they can prod slowpokes in their garden into blossoming out gloriously, but we can hope that time will come fairly soon.

Plant Logan beans thickly

The very tenderness of the superior green snap bean, Logan, has given it a bad name on germination. Now research men have discovered that it's because field-bean combines are used in threshing the seeds, that the more tender seeds of Logan are often cracked. This results in poorer germination. So I recommend sowing Logan seeds 1 inch apart in the row. Logan's extra-fine flavor and the big crops you get from it makes this worthwhile.

The secret of 2,4-D has been cracked

Use of this chemical weed killer has spread like fire. There are few who haven't tried to rid their lawns of dandelions and plantains with it. But no one has really known, till now, how or why it killed these lawn weeds, yet left the bluegrass.

It worked—but how?

How did it kill poison ivy and greater ragweed, the great plague of hay-fever sufferers? How did it rid grain fields of large weeds without harming the grain? Why could it save California vineyards almost abandoned to the puncture vine? How could it free Louisiana cane and rice fields of choking weeds yet leave the crops?

Dr. Burdean Esther Struckmeyer, plant pathologist in the horticulture department of the University of Wisconsin, has the answer. Briefly, it's this: 2,4-D causes the normal channels of plant nutrition to be choked off. When plants are sprayed with 2,4-D, the cambium layer in the stems thickens. As the cambium thickens, the beginnings of new roots appear in it. These finally develop to a point where all of the plant's food channels are choked.

Normally, as plants grow older, they lose most of their cambium. This is why older poison ivy plants are difficult to kill when the younger ones quickly succumb to sprays of 2,4-D. Doctor Struckmeyer's discovery also explains why when you spray your lawn to kill dandelions, bluegrass is not hurt. Grasses are monocots. Monocots have no cambium, no place when they're sprayed with 2,4-D, for the roots to start. [2,4-D is short for the chemical label 2, 4-dichlorophenoxyacetic acid. Ed.]

Draintile for celery works two ways

From the Sanford, Florida, winter celery region, I have this idea applicable to home gardens. Draintile is laid 12 to 15 inches below the surface, or about 6 inches below the normal root run of celery. During extremely wet weather it serves as a drain. When the weather turns dry, the lower end is closed, and water run into tile irrigates the soil. Thus the high cost of laying the tile is divided, and I have never known a region where at some time during the year you did not need both drainage and irrigation.

The right answers can mean money in your pocket

Q. How soon does insulation pay for itself?

☐ About 4 years ☐ Never, actually ☐ Depends on price

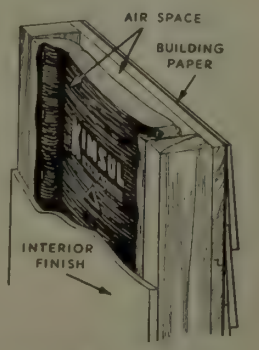
A. KIMSUL* insulation, installed throughout a new home, cuts yearly fuel bills possibly as much as 44%, and therefore pays for itself within a few years (usually about 4). KIMSUL quickly pays for itself when installed in the attic of an existing home, too, by cutting fuel bills up to 33%.

Q. How does insulation protect your health?

☐ Reduces drafts ☐ Keeps temperatures even ☐ Increases radiant warmth

A. All three answers are correct. The exclusive many-layer stitched design of KIMSUL provides uniform insulating efficiency. No wasted thick spots, no thin spots where heat can leak out. That's why KIMSUL makes for even temperatures throughout your whole house. KIMSUL also keeps the inside surfaces of walls, floors and ceilings warmer, thereby contributing to radiant warmth. And with KIMSUL forming a continuous layer of protection against heat loss, drafts are virtually eliminated.

Q. Why should a house be insulated at the time it's built?



☐ To save work ☐ To assure proper installation ☐ To save money

A. You'll save ⅓ to ⅔ on cost of insulation if you insulate your house at the time it's built. And in the average 6-room house, insulation costs less than a new refrigerator—adds but a few cents to mortgage payments.

Q. How should insulation be installed in walls?

☐ With air space on both sides ☐ With air space on one side ☐ With no air space

A. Builders will tell you the most efficient way to insulate walls is with air space on both sides of the insulation. This reduces heat lag and condensation—one of the many advantages of using KIMSUL insulation. Because of its flexibility, KIMSUL is easily installed around obstructions. And KIMSUL can be used effectively for caulking around door and window frames to stop infiltration of cold air and sound.

Bring your storage space up to date

PROBLEM Built-in buffet and the three oddly shaped windows around it used up one wall of this tiny breakfast room. Because of fancy trim and bad design, the buffet itself gave little china and linen storage for the room it took. The windows were hard to curtain

By Dorothy Killam

Stumped by a built-in buffet? If yours is old-fashioned or too small to hold all your china, your best bet may be to take it out. You'll find it's hard to modernize the old buffet, and hard to bring the room up to date while the buffet still dominates the room.

Here's a built-in buffet that didn't do its job. So the Dean Gilmores of Long Beach, California, took it out. They put a new Dutch door in the spot where the buffet had been—and fitted recessed china shelves into the space where there had been windows.

Mr. Gilmore took saw and paint to the dining set; Mrs. Gilmore stitched curtains. See how well it all turned out.

Photographs: George de Gennaro

SOLUTION Ripping out the buffet—and replacing it with a Dutch door—reclaimed six inches of needed floor space. China shelves fill window spaces at either side. Cupboards below shelves store more than the old buffet ever did

I hated housework till . . .

I developed a two-track mind. While I was doing dishes, I'd give a speech. To the soapy tumblers I'd say, "Today I'll give my opinion on city planning." Scouring the frying pan I'd finish, "And that, ladies and gentlemen, is why I think we need city planning." You'd be surprised how this practice helps when I'm called on at club to give a talk. I found if you learn to talk coherently in spite of the distraction of the job the distraction of an audience is easier.

Actually you need only the basement of your brain to do routine tasks. Why not put the main floor of your brain to work on something to profit you?

Try thumbtacking over your sink a map of Europe, the United States, or China. As you pare potatoes, study the map. As you scour the sink, imagine yourself drawing the map. One day you'll hear the compliment "She's up on things."—Verona Backus, Burton, Washington.

I started planning my days. Life doesn't get too complicated if it's organized. The night before, I chart the following day's activities in as much detail as possible, planning the meals, the housework, any family activities. I've encouraged my children and husband to lay out their clothes for the next day the night before, so there won't be such a morning scramble.

Even leisure time can benefit from planning. We schedule family outings and trips ahead of time. Anticipation is half the fun anyway. I've come to the conclusion that a happy home is no haphazard affair. It's the result of planning.—Mrs. Thomas L. Croft, St. Louis.

I streamlined with short cuts. I dispensed with washing and ironing tablecloths and napkins except for special company. Instead I used plastic cloths or place mats and paper napkins. I cut ironing of clothes in half by purchasing only seersuckers and corduroys for the children, by using sheets and dish towels unironed. I kept table tops well waxed so they'd resist scratching and spotting, and I used handy coasters under glasses to prevent moisture rings.

I put easily removable, washable slipcovers on upholstered furniture. I bought all the laborsaving equipment I could afford. Thus I began to look upon my role of housewife as a job I enjoyed doing both quickly and well.—Mrs. John S. Swift, Winchester, Massachusetts.

I went on strike! One afternoon I dropped everything and took a walk. I ran into some friends; we had a soda together and dropped in on another friend who had just had a baby. It was a perfectly frivolous two hours, but it did me a world of good. So I decided to go on strike for two hours on Tuesday and Thursday. I told my neighbor, Grace, about my intention and she decided to follow suit. We agreed on 2 to 4 as our strike hours, so we do lots of things together.

Others in our block soon started striking, too. The young mother on the corner takes 10 to 11 while little Jerry is napping. While she can't leave the house, she can get away from her housework. She naps, reads, fixes her nails, trys a new hairdo, anything she wants to do during that precious recess.

We strikers are convinced the time we take out each day doesn't make our housework suffer. We work faster and better while looking forward to our time off, and we return to our work refreshed and enthusiastic.—Rowena Devine Boylan, North Hollywood, California.

I adopted an odd-job hour. I've doubled up on as many jobs as possible; for instance, while the clothes are in the washing machine, I clean the basement shelves, or while a cake is in the oven, I wash the dishes. I've tried short cuts to speed up my work; I've canceled out unnecessary jobs like ironing the sheets.

I've shifted some tasks to the rest of the family; for instance, each one makes his own bed now. The minutes saved make it possible for me to take an hour each morning for odd jobs. During that hour I take an inventory of my canned goods, straighten the linen closet, check the family wardrobe for needed replenishments, polish the light fixtures, weed the garden, catch up on extra mending, or do any odd job I'd otherwise put off until tomorrow.—Florence J. Johnson, Banning, California.

I hated housework till . . .

I used the one-a-day plan to get all my extra household chores done. For instance, I put clean paper on the top kitchen cabinet shelf when I'm washing and putting away dishes on Monday. On Tuesday I do another shelf. It takes only 5 minutes a day, and I never have a time-consuming general cupboard cleaning to do.

I apply the same method to washing curtains and blankets. One blanket at a time or one set of curtains at a time add very little to my usual washing. Now that the extras don't pile up and make me feel swamped, I don't mind housework any more.—Marjorie R. Longwell, Sherman Oaks, California.

I changed my standard of living. I reappraised my sense of values and discarded those time-consuming activities without meaning or worth. That gave me more time for important enjoyable things. Ruthlessly I examined my clubs and withdrew from those I had been attending merely through force of habit. I limited our entertaining to that I wanted to do, and kept it casual. I cut out unnecessary jobs.—Alavan Allen, Portland, Oregon.

I learned to keep home not keep house. Aviators have a name for it. "You don't fly it, you strap it on and wear it," they affectionately remark about a ship they like to fly. A house simply cannot pass itself off as a home until it is lived-in.

If you keep your house clean so you and your family will enjoy living in it, you are making a home. But if a book casually put down in the middle of an interesting chapter or two chairs pulled comfortably together for a chat throw you in a tizzy of picking up, then you are keeping house. That's the lesson I learned. I no longer let the house wear me out. Instead, the family "wears" the house.—T. M. Rippey, Norwood, Ohio.

I adopted a flexible schedule designed especially by me for me. I had tried Monday, washday; Tuesday, ironing; Wednesday, mending. But I found this system as outmoded for my needs as Grandma's steel-ribbed corset. Often the Sunday papers were still scattered on Monday morning, or Sunday entertaining had left the house in a turmoil. The week's meals needed planning. I tried washing on Tuesday instead of Monday. That suited me better.

I applied the same suit-myself approach to ironing. If I sit on a comfortable stool, I've found I actually enjoy doing a small batch of ironing during the evening when the radio is going and my husband is at hand to chat with.

By adapting each job to my own needs and preferences, I really like keeping house now.—Jean Reiman, Downers Grove, Illinois.

One product—

NEW

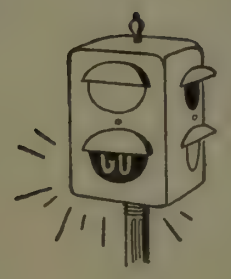
with LUMINESS



—truly does all these things:

Actually adds whiteness to clothes—Because of its new light-reflecting ingredient Luminess, the New La France makes white clothes whiter than new. You can see the difference!

Actually brightens colors—Again, it's the Luminess that helps New La France to do what no other bluing can claim: make colors brighter instead of duller!

Safe with any washable material—Beautiful as the new materials are, some are mighty delicate. New La France treats them all with unfailing gentleness. Kind to hands, too!

Better than any other bluing—Most bluing covers up "yellowness" with a light tint of blue. Many bluings over-blue, leaving a blue tint. New La France makes clothes whiter by adding whiteness.

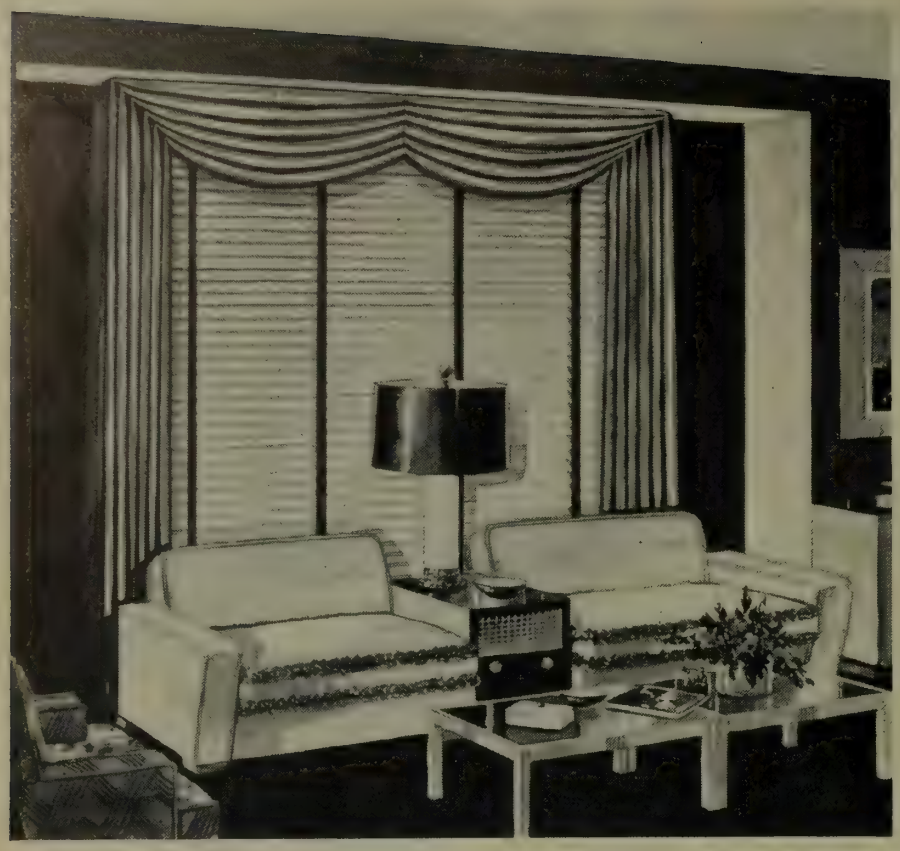
Can't streak, spot or cause rust spots—Old-fashioned bluings can do all three, unless used with great care. La France can't . . . because it goes in with the soap and is completely dissolved during washing.

Perfect with soap or detergent—Use any soap or any detergent, new La France was made with soaps and detergents in mind.

Works as well in washers as in tub laundry—La France works just as wonderfully in the new automatic washers, as in agitator type washers, or hand laundering.

Easy to use as adding salt to recipe—All you do is add a quarter box of La France when you add the soap. It's easy as that!

Guaranteed or double your money back—If you can't see the difference in whiteness and brightness when you wash with La France, mail the box to General Foods, Hoboken. We'll send twice the price you paid.



Costs only pennies per week—What a mighty pile of work it does for small pay! Get New La France today . . . try it next time you wash!

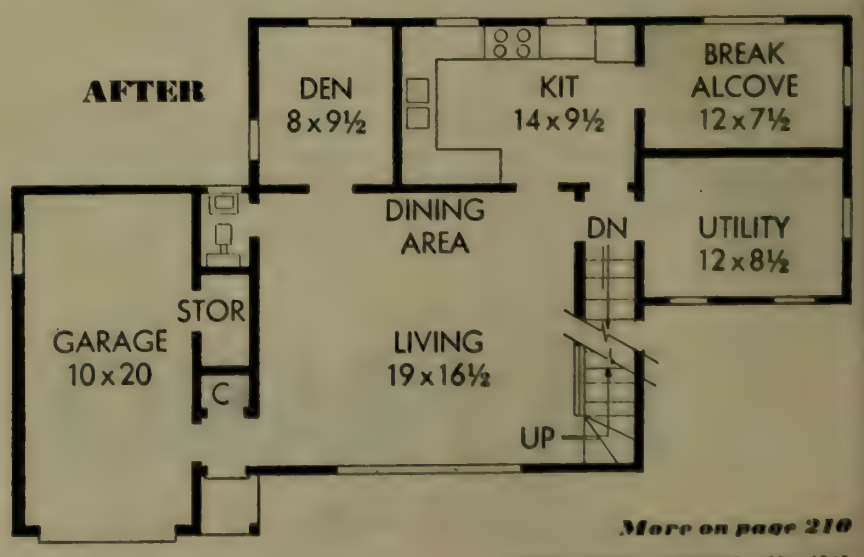
How good an amateur architect are you?



You're pretty good, you amateur architects. From the number of errors you've found in plans the past months, you've proved yourselves adept at planning houses. But how good are you at remodeling?

Planning remodelings is difficult, because you are limited by the lines of an existing house. But someday you may have to remodel your own home.

We hope you'll do a better job than the man who planned this one. He wanted a larger living room with small dining space, a den, a laundry room, an easy-to-use kitchen, a half-bath, a basement stairway that would get him outdoors without having to go through any room, and an attached garage. He set no cost limit, though he didn't want to be extravagant.

Below is the plan he started with, and his final result. See if you can find his errors—there are a butcher's dozen. Answers and a better solution for this remodeling appear on page 210.

PRESS for sewing

By Isabel McGovern

Stitch and then press is a good rule for professional-looking dresses, suits, draperies, and slipcovers which you make at home. Your fabric may be beautiful, your pattern just right, and your seams neatly finished. But unless you press carefully from start to finish, the results may be disappointing. Sewing is made easier, too, if you press as you go.

What you'll need

Home sewing doesn't require many accessories. But a few shorten pressing time, make the job easier. All of them can be improvised at home. On this page and the next are pictures of the most necessary equipment. In addition, you may want the pressing aids listed here:

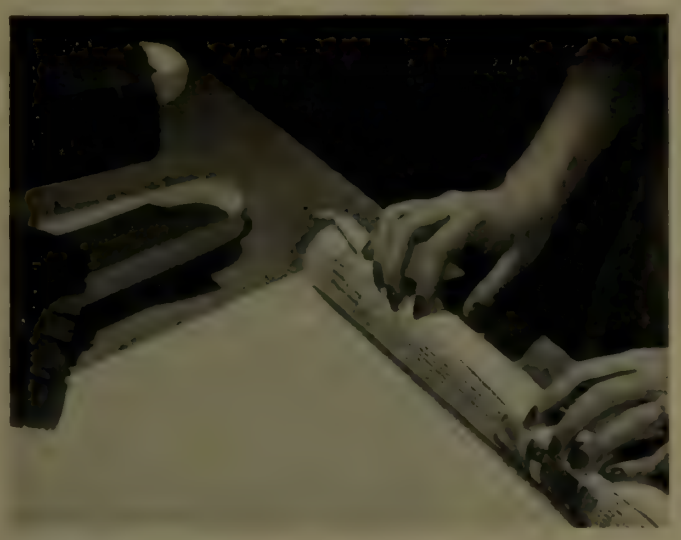
Tailor's cushion. This is useful for pressing curved seams, shoulders, tops of sleeves. To make one, sew together two 9- by 12-inch oval pieces of heavy muslin from which sizing has been removed by rinsing. Leave a small opening. Turn, stuff tightly with kapok or cotton, and stitch the opening. A terry-cloth towel rolled into a firm ball makes a fairly satisfactory substitute for the cushion.

Triangular-shaped pad. This is helpful for short darts and can be made like the tailor's cushion from two triangles of material—each side of triangle about 9 inches long.

Tailor's pounding board and wood block. A heavy whisk broom, used on the flat side, substitutes for pounding board; ironing board for wooden block. First, the fabric is steamed until damp. Then, with the material flat on the ironing board, beat along seams, collars, or lapels with a whisk broom to flatten them. This method prevents a shine. It also helps to dry out fabric by forcing steam out of material. Pounding board and block are used only for tailoring.

Hangers. Have a good supply of hangers on hand to keep the pressed section free from wrinkles and out of the way.

More on page 182



Iron and ironing board. Your iron may be either dry or steam, but it should have a reliable heat control. Be sure that the ironing board is well-padded so that pressing won't make any shiny seam marks on the right side of material being pressed perfection

Your sewing can look professional if you press carefully and often. Here is the simple equipment you will need and how to use it

Sleeve board is handy for sleeves, pressing seams open, and hard-to-get-at places. Keep it near the sewing machine, use it in place of large ironing board. It, too, should be well padded. (A piece of an old wool blanket makes good padding)

Seam board. A makeshift "sleeve board" can be made: Roll a newspaper into a tight bundle, cover it with a smooth towel or cloth, and fasten it securely. A rolling pin cut in half lengthwise, padded and covered, makes a sturdy seam board

Press cloth. Make a press cloth from muslin or a smooth cotton fabric from which sizing is removed. Or buy handy commercial products such as parchment paper (shown above) or chemically treated cloths—these eliminate any shine or lint

How to press properly

Check the fabric to be certain it is free of wrinkles before laying out the pattern. If not, press the material.

Experiment with a fabric scrap to determine the exact amount of dampness, the correct heat, and the need for a press cloth. Most rayons, nylons, and silks need only a small amount of moisture. Wools, cottons, and linens require more. A low heat is best on acetate rayons and nylons. More heat is necessary on other rayons and silks, lightweight cottons, wools, and heavy cottons. Some fabrics, especially wools, need a press cloth for "shine" protection. In general, you'll need a press cloth or sponge if you use a dry iron. Usually a steam iron doesn't require any press cloth.

Set iron down squarely on the unpressed area, press it lightly, lift it up, set it down again on another spot. Do not slide the iron back and forth as in ironing.

Press with the "grain" or "weave" of the fabric to avoid pulling it out of shape. Press lightly over basting threads or pins—and press again after they are removed.

Lift the press cloth from the fabric occasionally so that the steam can escape.

Press on the wrong side except for right-side details, such as pleats, and the final pressing. When you press on the right side, do it lightly and stop before the fabric is completely dry. Brush the nap after pressing to avoid a shine.

Seams. Most seams are pressed open in direction of stitching. It's wise to press seams every time you join two sections

Use vegetable brush (as shown in picture), sponge, a piece of lintless muslin to dampen press cloth (chemicall y treated cloth shown above). With a steam iron use a doubled piece of cheesecloth (do not dampen it) on right side of the material any bargain houses. And only a few offer hope that these prices will decline in any future they can currently appraise. Costs may be frozen by the government—that is a possibility. But that costs will drop substantially in the foreseeable future seems improbable.

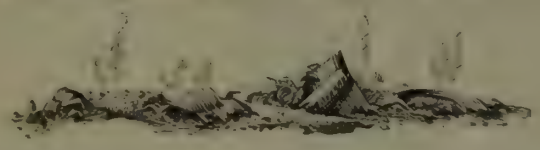
Against this background, where is the best place for you to get home-building or home-buying money? There is no categorical answer to that: Your loan source will depend on your individual circumstances and your individual community. Your job is to find out where, in your city, you can get the best over-all mortgage contract.

Lenders agree that the average family too often is willing to tie up too great a share of its income in mortgage payments. Most of them also agree that if more than 20 percent of the monthly income is devoted to this purpose, the risk is too great. You should give yourself a safety factor in your loan.

The best mortgage plan for you should give you a debt-free home in the shortest possible period of time. Your monthly payments should be convenient, like rent. And the payments should not impose too great a strain on your current income.

From your standpoint, a mortgage should be flexible, easy to repay, and low in cost. Try to set up your program so you can readjust payments in case your income is curtailed. The loan agreement should provide that your interest load will decrease with each payment you make. It should let you pay off your debt in full at any time, without penalty.



When you go to an agency for a loan, take with you cost figures of the property you want to buy, and a photograph of it, or plans and specifications, if you plan to build. If the house is already built, have available as much information as possible on the type of construction, condition of roof, type of basement, make of heating equipment, neighborhood, nearness to schools and transportation, taxes, building code, and a description of the lot. These will be checked by the lender, but having the information with you at your first interview will speed negotiations.

Give the lender full information about yourself, your credit rating, earnings, references. If your new car isn't paid for, tell him so. The fact that you have kept your payments up to date may impress him more than if you told him you paid cash for it. If you're in business for yourself, have with you figures to show the financial condition and operations of your firm. (Income-tax records usually are satisfactory.)

Select the firm you borrow from just as carefully as it selects you as a borrower—you'll be doing business together for many years.

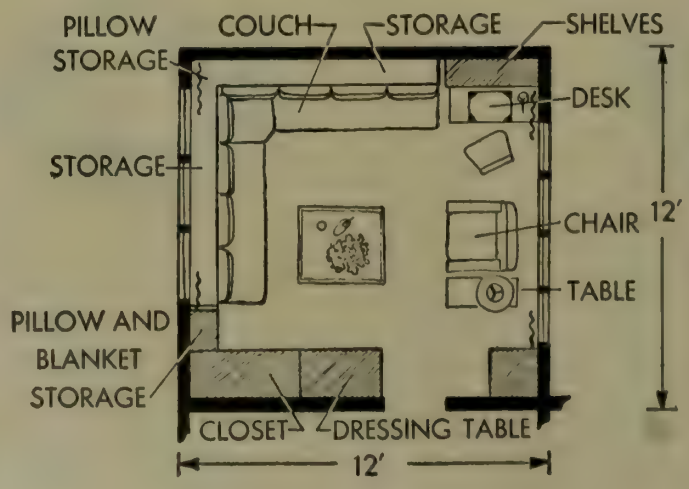
A 12 by 12 room does four jobs

It's a { bedroom / dressing room / writing room / sunroom } all in one

By Lou Richardson

HERE'S a room 12 feet by 12 feet that gives a four-star performance. It's in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Henry L. McIntyre, Palo Alto, California.



Mrs. McIntyre wanted a bedroom that would not look like a bedroom. She wanted a dressing room that would be easy to keep in order. She wanted a sunroom that would be a pleasant place in which to read or write.

Architect Leslie I. Nichols put all the things Mrs. McIntyre wanted into the one room shown here. Couch beds slide back under a cove to serve as seating furniture during the day; pull out for sleeping. Cabinet doors open out or slide sideways or drop down to expose dressing table, wardrobe, and writing desk. And as a sunroom, this is a fine example of all the living you can get out of one room.

Photographs: Sturtevant

Sunroom. Window walls let in the sun, make the room inviting for daytime activities. Behind the two couches is a cabinet arrangement that serves as a ledge under the windows, makes a back rest for the couch cushions, and forms the cove under which couches can be rolled back to provide sofa-width seats

Bedroom. Couches roll out to make beds. Note that corner arrangement. Doors of cabinet swing out and lock at corner to make a square box in which to pile cushions and slipcovers. To supplement indirect lighting, the bed light (which is hidden in cabinet by day) is clipped to ledge of cabinet at night

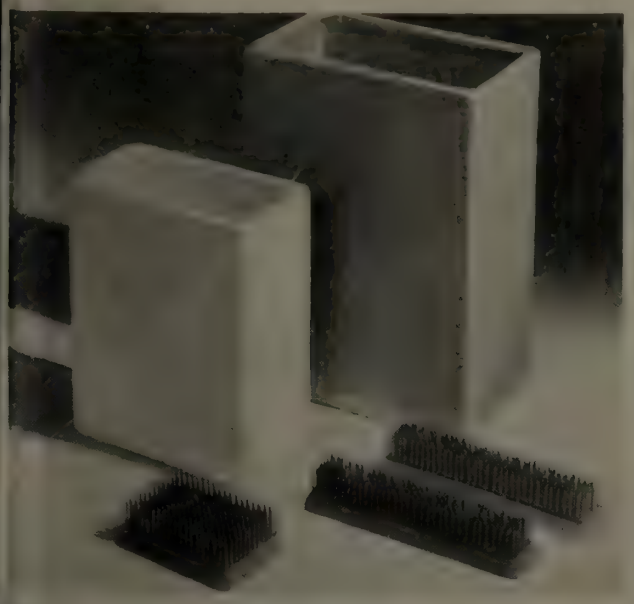
Bowls you'll need for flower arranging

By Fae Huttenlocher

You'll feel a lot more expert about flower arranging and find it much easier if you have the right kind of bowl and holder. Here are basic containers and holders you'll use through a whole year of flowers.



Round bowl is the type you'll want to use on a round dining or occasional table. It's 7½ inches in diameter. Add a pair of figurines, one on each side, or use just one figurine. If you use the one figurine, place it in front where needlepoint holder is in photograph

Rectangular bowl is useful for all types of flowers, all types of arrangements. Two sizes are shown—6 by 10 inches and 8 by 13 inches. You'll use the larger one for such heavy-headed flowers as peonies, iris, zinnias. The 4-inch needlepoint holder shown has a lead base and copper needles. It's heavy enough to hold tall flowers or branches without toppling. If you use only a few flowers or branches, you can conceal the needles with some pebbles or foliage

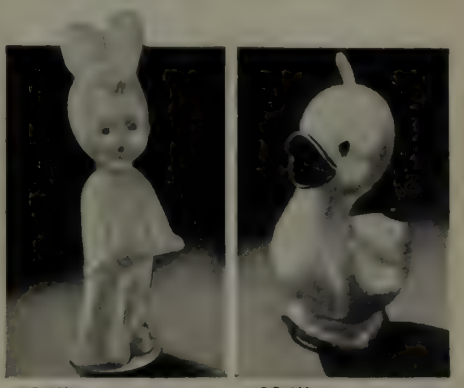
Pillow-shaped vase is one of the smartest and most usable flower containers. Use it on narrow fireplace ledges, bookcases, window sills, consoles, and small dining tables. Big vase is 8 inches high, smaller one is 6 inches high. You can make handsome arrangements with flowers, greens, or berries. The narrow, rectangular needlepoint holders are designed especially to fit this shape vase



Tall vase is ideal for long-stemmed, heavy-headed flowers such as peonies, carnations, and hothouse roses. Its narrow opening holds three to five flowers, as attractively as it does a dozen. Plastic foam (lower left), from the florist, can be cut to fit snugly about half way down neck of vase. Push flower stems through this plastic foam holder and under water—in angle you wish them to stay

ARE YOU training

By Marjorie Holmes

In the small town where I grew up, a lumber compa issued a series of calendars called "Courtship and the Joys Marriage." One of the courtship sequence showed a you couple seated at safely distant ends of a canoe. The you man, in white flannels, gazed dreamily toward the you lady, in white organdy, who was trailing her fingers throu the water. Throughout the year we watched this same han some couple exchanging a chaste kiss beneath a weddi bell of roses, being gondolaed through Venetian canals (t honeymoon), clasping hands as they gazed into the fi (baby coming), and ultimately romping with their cheru through a storybook cottage.

Despite the realities all about us, a lot of us had just su concepts of marriage. Girls were reared as potential hou keepers, but seldom as potential wives. Their mothers du fully taught them to cook, sew, and keep house. Some dari parents blushingly admitted that marriage included a sec known as sex. The rest was left to instinct and imaginatic

Today we have high school and college courses in th most important aspect of human life. We have magazir and books. Which is, of course, to be heartily applauded except for one unfortunate result. All this has made it ju that much easier for mothers and dads to skin out of th natural job—training daughters to be wives.

Recently, when informed that a family-life course was be introduced into her daughter's school curriculum, heard a woman remark, "Thank heaven. Fred and I ha been thinking one of us should talk to Evelyn. Now we wo have to bother."

Another couple justify the fact that their teen-ager has household duties with, "She's really more trouble than sh worth when it comes to helping, and after all she'll lea she's taking home economics."

Now anyone, man or woman, who's ever wrestled with house knows that you can't learn the many aspects there at school in two hours a week. Homemaking has to be pr ticed regularly in that native workshop, the home. That if a girl is ever expected to become good at it.

And any parents who search their conscience must real that the facts of life are fundamentally their department however excellent the teaching of strangers. If we h failed earlier, the least we can do later is to show interest what our child is getting. We should be ready and able interpret this teaching in the light of our own experien

Finally, the mother and father who really want th daughter one day to become a good and happy wife, v give some conscious attention to training her in the ba psychology of marriage—just learning to live in harm with another individual. Every year that your daughte growing up at home offers opportunities for you to help h First, of course, through example. Second, through c structive suggestions. And it's never too early to begin.

What then are you doing to prepare her for marriage? you thinking in terms of tomorrow, and training her tod

YOUR DAUGHTER TO BE A wife?

Let's discuss the three phases of marriage—practical, psychological, and physical, and see what can be done.

Practical

Most little girls love to "keep house," to play at dusting and doing dishes. Lots of them are helping with simple household tasks at 7, 5, even 3. But not so many are still helping at 12 and 14! For what was at first fun for Betty is now a chore; and the first pleased anticipation of the help Betty's going to be, has given way to a weary realization that it's easier to do it yourself than keep after Betty.

But for Betty's own welfare (plus that of the man she marries) you ought to be firm. And you ought to lay it straight on the line: "Look, in not too many years you'll be running a home of your own. Helping now is the surest way to learn." You can also use this argument: "Keeping a neat house is just as important as keeping a neat figure, when it comes to holding a man's love and respect." Girls like to be appealed to on adult emotional level. It's more effective than nagging.

Nor is there much need for nagging if you make a girl's jobs pleasant for her. Do you listen to her suggestions about arranging furniture and hanging curtains? If she fancies a different floor wax or soap powder from the one you are using, do you let her try it? Do you continually hang over her advising, "No, do it this way"—or do you give her a free hand? Do you praise her efforts at cooking, and refrain from scolding when she scorches the pudding?

It takes a heap of self-discipline in training a daughter to be a wife. It takes a heap of tact! But nobody said it was easy.

Naturally no daughter should be a drudge. Whatever your motives or however fine your methods, you will only make her hate housework forever if you impose undue burdens, or demand that she sacrifice her rightful fun. But with common sense, with a sincere desire to equip her for the work she'll probably spend most of her life doing, you can be both a good parent and a good teacher.

The arithmetic of marriage is definitely important to its success. Now I often wonder how Mr. Right of the calendar courtship paid for the vine-covered cottage. Maybe he worked for the lumber company and brought his pay envelope home every Saturday night. In fairness to my generation there should have been at least one picture showing our hero and heroine frowning, if ever so slightly, over a pile of bills.

It's an omission no parents should overlook in training our children for marriage. Successful homes are built upon love—and a sound bank account. Not riches, necessarily, but security, or at least good prospects. Personally, we want our daughter to choose her future mate for what he is, rather than what he has—but also want her to understand that it's not easy to be poor when you're young and in love. That in many ways it's harder than [Turn to page 217

Problem children are passe

By Milton and Mildred Lehman

If you're saying, "I just don't know what to do with Johnny!" you'll find help here in the advice of Dr. Daniel A. Prescott, who refuses to believe that kids are naturally mean and uncooperative. Because of his crusade, your boy or girl has a better chance of being understood at school and, if you'll read this, at home

In the old days, you would have called John a problem child. When John was in the seventh grade, he suddenly changed personalities as completely and as mysteriously as Doctor Jekyll. Formerly generous and good-natured, he began to bully the smaller kids. At home and at school, he flew into rages when he was crossed.

In the old days, and in some schools today, John's teacher would have demanded obedience, kept John after school, sent a note to his parents, and sent John to the principal.

All this would have done no good. The teacher would have hated herself and her job. John's father and mother would have been bewildered and discouraged. They probably would have gotten mad at the school, the teacher, John, and each other. John would have kept on getting worse, more of a problem every day.

Today, however, if John is fortunate enough to live in Maryland, or go to certain up-to-date schools in any one of 16 other states, his experience will be different.

To know why, let's change the scene to a wintery afternoon several years ago. We're in a small mill town in South Carolina sitting in with two dozen schoolteachers on a meeting. Dr. Daniel A. Prescott, a child psychologist from the University of Chicago, is talking about children and how to handle them.

When he finishes, he asks for questions. One aroused schoolmarm raises her hand. "Doctor Prescott," she asks, "we've all read books about children and we've listened to a lot of lectures. But when we try to use such Understanding isn't easy, but it pays off when you try. In one Maryland county where teachers studied the worst kids in their rooms, visits to the principal fell 40 percent and everyone is happier theories, we never get anywhere. Don't you think we'd learn more by studying actual children in our own classroom?"

That simple question stopped the Doctor. The schoolmarm had something. Why hadn't he seen it that way before? Before the meeting was over, he had thought out a way to combine modern psychology with the teachers' observations of real children. The group in South Carolina adopted his program. They're still following it.

Since then, Doctor Prescott has been showing teachers and parents all over America his plan and how it works.

Wherever he goes, he's sure to hear a parent or a teacher say: "I don't know what to do with Johnny any more."

In the face of this despair, he has launched a revolutionary program in the public schools, a program of understanding.

Today the Prescott Plan—officially known as the Institute for Child Study—is giving teachers and parents a new insight into the behavior of children.

The plan itself is deceptively simple. Twice a month the teachers meet in small groups to discuss actual children they have in their own classes. Each teacher has already selected one child to study, preferably one who is almost too much for her. In these [Turn to next page closed sessions, the teachers compare notes. If they can't work out a problem by group discussion, they call in an expert.

But if it's that easy, you ask, why don't all schools do it? The point is that it's not easy. The program is really a three-year course of study guided by Prescott. Doctor Prescott makes no elaborate claims for his plan. "It's neither newfangled nor a cure-all," he says. What it does show teachers for the first time is how to apply in their classrooms the knowledge that science has uncovered about children's behavior.

Does it work?

Well, for three years the teachers of Montgomery County, Maryland, have been trying the Prescott Plan. In that time, according to Mrs. Grace Johnson Allnut, county supervisor, 40 percent fewer children have taken that desperate trip to the principal's office.

Prescott, himself, looks at it this way. "There's no more room for the dictator teacher—or for that matter, a dictator parent. Too much discipline and too little understanding have brought us to a blind alley. Youngsters say they hate school, that their teachers are often mean, bossy, sharp-tempered. And teachers complain that the younger generation is restless, undisciplined, and lazy. Understanding, he concludes, is one way out—for the key to the child is always the understanding adult."

Teachers, under the Prescott Plan, learn about the changes that take place in growing children from the youngsters, not from books. Recently, in a Pennsylvania schoolhouse, the teachers were discussing the problem of growing up. "As grownups, we sometimes forget what it means to grow up," one of them declared. "Often the behavior that bothers us most is merely a sign of good health."

"And now we see," the discussion leader was saying, "that all children face enormous tasks in growing up. They must learn to talk, dress, get along in groups, read, write, figure, spell, respect property, and command respect for themselves. Miss Barnes has just told us about Martha. In Martha, we see what happens when a child fails to answer the voice of her own growth."

Once upon a time the teachers might have called Martha a good child. At 12, she was very quiet.

When the rest of the children laughed at a joke, she barely smiled. When they were noisy, she was listless. When the teacher called on her to recite, she trembled and once she cried.

For months, Miss Barnes watched Martha, carefully observing her, but drew no conclusions. She noted that Martha "turned crimson when asked to read aloud" . . . "answered my questions but did not voluntarily say a word" . . . "did not join in yells at the football game." After several months, the teacher wrote in her notebook: "Martha is overquiet, easily discouraged, depressed, and lacks self-confidence—why?"

In Martha's home, where she visited the child's parents, the teacher found the answer. "We never had any trouble with her before," the mother said. "She always did everything we told her. But now, when she ought to make up her own mind, she starts crying. All the other little girls her age act natural, but Martha seems afraid of her own shadow."

Martha's mother and her teacher talked about adolescence and what it required of the child. They agreed that Martha needed encouragement. "The main trouble with Martha was her mother," the teacher reported later. "All the time the child was growing up, she'd been commanded to behave. And now, when she was changing from a little girl into a little woman, she was on her own and she didn't know what to do."

Unlike P.T.A. meetings, where parents usually ask the teacher how Bobby is getting along, the Prescott Plan encourages teachers to make warm, personal visits to the home. The program has been so successful in Maryland that 30 groups of parents are studying their own youngsters.

"Columnists, radio lecturers, and magazine writers have all told us we don't know how to handle our children," says Mrs. Samuel Horne, leader of one such group which meets in the basement of the Grace Episcopal Church in Silver Spring. "Some of them told us we were overdominating; others said we were indifferent. But none of them told us what we could do about it.

"Since we got together with

WINDOW SHOPPING

Only yesterday they walked past without turning an eye. Today a sudden world of anticipation enthralls them.

The candy shop had installed a genuine plate glass window. A mouth-watering feast was spread before little eyes with big imaginations. Excitement was everywhere.

It was the time when Miss Sarah's Waverly Electric vied with Mr. Jason's high-backed Oldsmobile to challenge the buggy's right of way. Dreamers predicted hard tops for the dirt streets. But to small boys, nothing equaled the dreams awakened by the naked expanse of licorice twists and banana bars, of jaw breakers, horehounds and Valentine hearts. Other shops, with the forerunner of today's "visual front", bewitched the ladies with the latest in buttons and bows.

When polished plate glass, at last made in America, became inexpensive enough for even the smallest stores, appetites of all kinds were stimulated by the new pastime which caught America's fancy—window shopping.

Doctor Prescott," Mrs. Horne says, "we've discovered that our youngsters, whatever the sensationalists told us, are mostly normal children."

When he visits a school, Doctor Prescott often reminds the teachers of what he calls the three basic needs of every child. The maladjusted child, he says, has been shortchanged on at least one of them.

The first need is good health, food, and rest.

The second is love in the home and a sense of belonging outside the home.

The third is belief in oneself. This demands a feeling of success in at least one activity and a sense of accomplishment.

Against these yardsticks and others, you can measure the behavior of individual children and discover some of the answers.

In South Carolina, one group of teachers solved the problem of Stanley, age 7. Stanley, his teacher might once have said, was a liar.

Under Doctor Prescott's guidance, the teacher patiently watched Stanley and made careful notes. One day, when the class talked about ponies, Stanley said he had a fine pony at home. When they read "Mary Had a Little Lamb," he declared he had a lamb. "I have pigeons and dogs and cats and most animals there are," he announced. Once he said his father was a railroad engineer; again, that he had gone up in an airplane with his father, who was a pilot.

At first, the teachers were alarmed at the child's fantasies "Stanley must be shown the difference between truth and falsehood," one of them said. "He must be taught that nobody likes a liar."

Meanwhile, Stanley's teacher had visited his home. There she learned that his younger sister was the darling of the family, her father's pet. She found that Stanley, while never mistreated, was often neglected. Although he'd bragged and boasted of his possessions, his only toys were a china horse and a china lamb, both kept on a shelf in the living room.

At their next meeting, Stanley's teacher made a report. "I think I understand," she said quietly. "Stanley doesn't need discipline or sermons on truth. What he wants is affection. His own world isn't giving him what he needs, so he's been creating a world that will. Now I believe I can help."

Stanley's teacher did help. First, she encouraged him to use his imagination in school plays, in painting, in story-making. Second, she gave him real-life experiences to remember—trips to the zoo, nature hikes in the woods. And, finally, she got his father to buy him a small, live kitten.

"Stanley is still imaginative," his teacher reported later, "but now he talks about things that actually happened. And I've learned how to help some of these things happen."

Often, the problem that drives teachers frantic has the simples possible explanation. In his sevent grade schoolroom, Henry was al ways troublesome. He quarrelec He talked back. And he never re membered his lessons.

Henry, his teacher discoverec simply needed sleep. Early in th morning and in the afternoon whe school was out, he delivered new papers. His father worked on night shift, and Henry often staye up late at night to keep his mothe company. All this Henry's mothe explained when the teacher cam to visit. She agreed that he neede more sleep. Later, the teacher tol her colleagues, "Just think," sh exclaimed, "what we might hav done with Henry! We'd have pur ished him in class. We'd have sen him to the principal. And we' have turned out a fine problen child when there was nothing reall wrong to begin with."

The study of a particular chil deepens the teacher's understand ing and tolerance of all children "Don't expect miracles, though," Doctor Prescott warns. "Under standing is a long, slow process." But Doctor Prescott's disciples putting his plan to practice, al most believe in miracles. "We' all heard so much about abnorma children," one teacher told him "that we forgot most children ar normal. You've taken the blinder from our eyes." A few weeks ago while Doctor Prescott was address ing a parent group in Maryland a lanky, gray-haired gentlemar came up to the platform at the end of the talk to shake his hand.

"Doctor Prescott," he said, "I used to be a high-school principal That was 20 years ago. I quit ther because it all seemed pretty hope less. I'd reached a point where I didn't know what to do with the youngsters. But if I'd known ther what you've just told us, I'd still be there at my job."

How to understand your youngster

Here are Doctor Prescott's four basic rules for parents:

1 Don't expect your child to act just like every other youngster, even his own brothers and sisters. Remember he's an individual.

2 Don't take it for granted he's stubborn or antisocial. Whatever he does, there's a cause. And because various causes affect each other, you may have to consider more than one.

3 Don't expect miracles. Your child's development is slow but sure.

4 Don't look for quick answers. It takes a long time to learn much about any child.

Home furnishings answers

Q. How should I place a grand piano in my living room? Mrs. R. A., Atchison, Kansas.

A. The straight side of your piano should be placed parallel to a wall —with the keyboard at right angles to the wall. If possible, the piano should be placed where the person playing it can see most people in the room and not have his back to the guests. Be sure to plan ample lighting for the keyboard.

Q. Ends of yarn are appearing on the surface of my new carpet. What can I do to get rid of them? Mrs. D. V., Anniston, Alabama.

A. Clip—don't pull—any ends of yarn which appear on your new rug. Most cut-pile rugs (Axminsters, Wiltons) will shed a fluff of lint or loose pile when they're new. This linting will stop after the loose yarns have worked their way out of the rug.

Ripe olives from California fill an honored place in the diet. Among other food values, California ripe olives offer you nourishing protein...and they're a source of Vitamin A and iron. But the reason California ripe olives are famed throughout the world is FLAVOR!

How to make a backache go away

4 good ways to get a backache

. . . strong back, weak mind

. . . just can't wait to get outside

. . . wouldn't part with this ol' bed

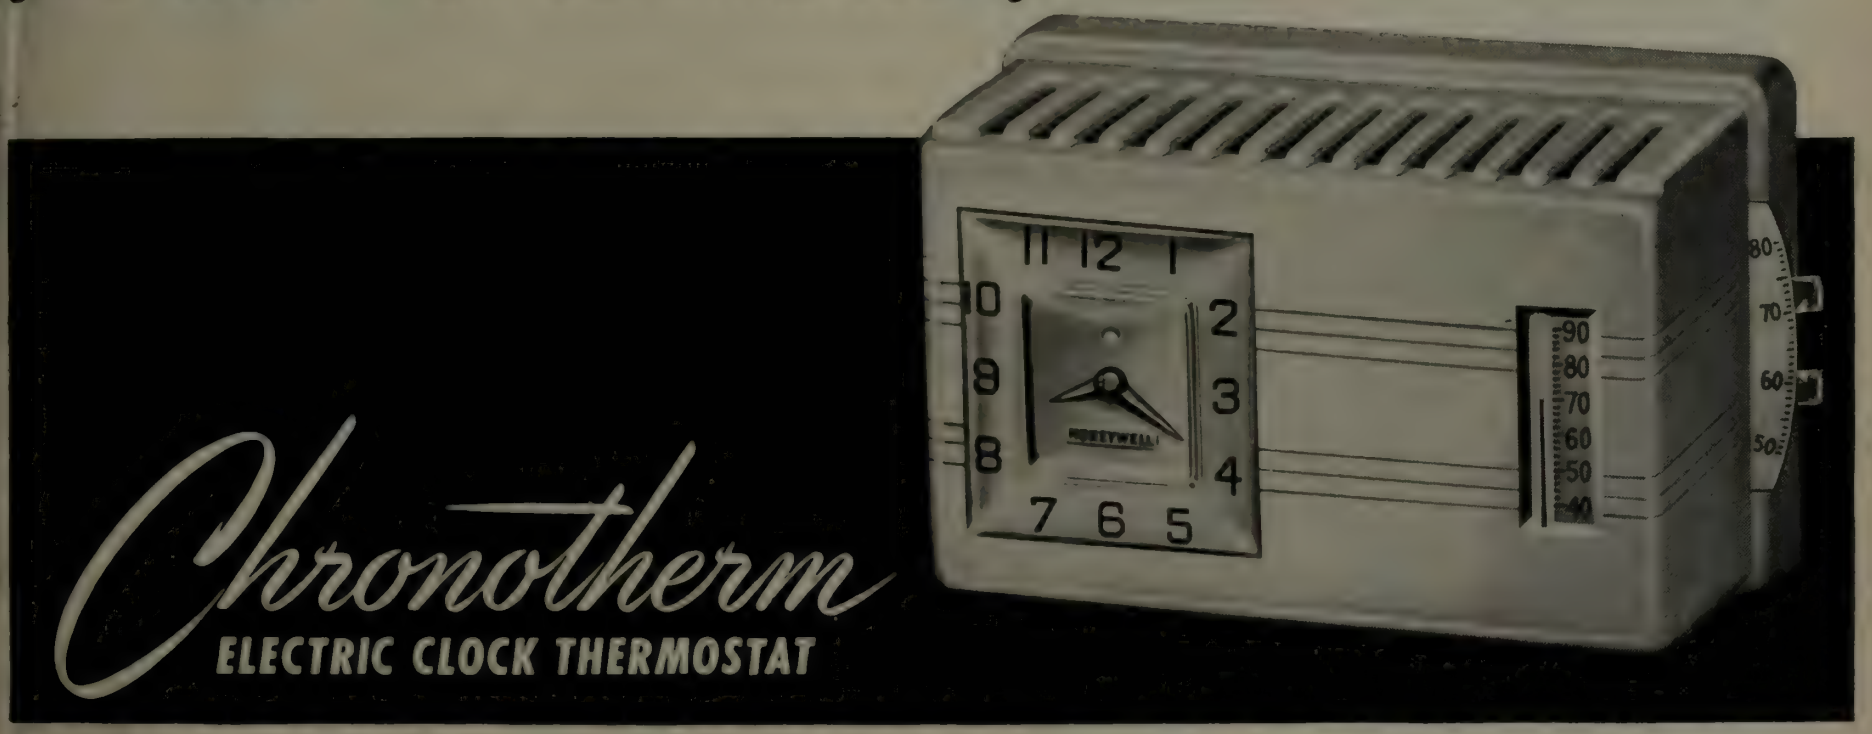
Drawings: Virgil Partch

. . . grandma didn't sit down to work

By George H. Waltz, Jr.

Four thousand backs aching in unison! Quite an array of twinges and pains, to be sure. But that's just about the typical backache score on the average day in the average community of 100,000 people. And all because prehistoric man insisted on walking on two legs instead of all four.

Backaches run a close race with headaches as man's, and woman's, most common ailment. If you lay claim to never having had one, relax. You will. Backaches are to adults what measles and mumps are to children—just about as inevitable and, in most cases, no more dangerous or deadly. They are one of the prices you pay for your vertical way of life.



A backache, like a headache, is a symptom, not a disease. That's one reason it's so common. It is an undeniable signal that something is wrong. It may be a symptom of anything from a simple strained muscle or poor eyesight to serious ailments such as gall-bladder trouble or even cancer. Luckily for you, the simpler backache causes far outnumber the more dangerous and complex ones.

Your doctor can list almost a hundred different reasons for an aching back. However, any backache pain can be placed in one of four main classifications: (1) pain caused by muscular fatigue or the misuse or strain of little-used muscles; (2) pain caused by a fall or actual injury; (3) pain due to worry over an unsolved emotional problem; (4) pain that is the symptom of some basic organic trouble.

About 90 percent of all backaches fall into the first three classes. Strain and muscle fatigue head the list.

To understand your aching back, and all the reasons for it, you will have to know a little about the spine and the muscles that support it. Centuries ago, in prehistoric days, all quadrupeds, including the early ape man, got around on all four legs. That was the accepted form of locomotion. Nature constructed the spine accordingly, like a flexibly jointed rod to be supported at both ends. Then prehistoric man, or his immediate predecessor, got the bright idea of walking around on his hind legs. He managed the change by [Turn to page 214 degrees, first alternating between two and four feet, just as the chimpanzee still does. Finally he stood erect and walked entirely on two. About that time he got a backache.

We've come a long way since then. But we haven't yet mastered the trick of standing and working erect without inviting a backache. Nature gradually altered the general shape of the spine to take care of its change from a horizontal member supported at both ends to a vertical member balanced on a single support. What she failed to do was to add more muscles to help hold the spinal column erect. As a result, your back is weaker than it should be.

Any unusual twisting or straining naturally tends to place undue stress on your inadequate back muscles, particularly the muscles at the lower end of the spine. Here the full weight of the upper body rests in a universal-like joint whose two parts are called the sacrum and the ilia. Anatomically, you have a natural built-in aptitude for backache or "low back pains."

The next time you are tempted to move a heavy table, lift a large trunk, or catch up on your exercise, just remember those muscles in your back. Take it easy. If you overstrain them, or place them in odd and awkward positions, you are inviting your back to ache.

Even if you feel you are in the best of trim (if you're over 40, you probably aren't), don't use your back as you would a derrick. When you have to lift something, let the muscles in your arms and legs do most of the work. Never lift anything quickly; ease your muscles into it. And when you garden for the first time this spring, remember that you are putting into use muscles that have been laid up pretty much all winter.

If your backache comes from muscular fatigue, it's because you use the same sets of back muscles all the time or use them awkwardly. You're particularly apt to have this type of backache if your job requires you to repeat the same motion over and again for long periods of time. Office workers often get a backache when they sit in chairs not suited to their work.

You can get a backache if your washtubs or sinks are too high or too low, if the kitchen work surface is comfortable neither for standing nor sitting. If your automobile seat fails to support your body in a comfortable and natural posture for driving, it can cause muscular fatigue. This is true even when you haven't been conscious of using the muscles that suddenly begin to ache.

Bed has always been a place to rest. Yet according to medical authorities, many of us get very little rest there. Instead of waking up relaxed and fresh, do you arise weary and backachy in spite of the sleep you've had? Doctors blame your bed with its well-used, rounded-out hollows that fit your body. A sagging bed that fails to support your spine doesn't allow the back muscles to relax. As a result, they are tense most of the night.

Take a good look at your bed if you are bothered with morning backaches. If it is soft and saggy, you have probably found the cause of your pains. Get a new mattress, and perhaps a new spring, or else bolster the old mattress with a flat 3x5-foot board inserted between the mattress and the spring. Several such "sleep" boards are available commercially. There is even a folding "sleep" board for travelers!

Things as remote as nearsightedness and partial deafness have been found to be the causes of mysterious aching backs. A nearsighted person unconsciously stretches his neck and shoulders forward in an attempt to get his eyes focused on the object he is trying to see. The continuous strain that this puts on the muscles of the neck and shoulders is likely to show up as pain. Similarly, the person who is deaf in one ear unconsciously is apt to cock his good ear forward in order to hear. This places an unnatural strain on the muscles at the opposite side of the neck and shoulders.

In most of these simple backaches, the underlying cause is posture—or rather the lack of it. If everyone would learn to stand, sit, walk, and work with his body held correctly most aching backs would quit aching.

To show yourself what good posture looks and feels like, back up against a wall until the back of your head, your buttocks, and your heels touch the wall. Then slowly adjust your pelvis, your stomach muscles, and your back until as much as possible of your back also touches. That is good posture. If you can only learn to hold your body in that position you will be giving your spine a break. You won't find it as comfortable at first as your usual drooping slouch, but in the long run you'll feel better.

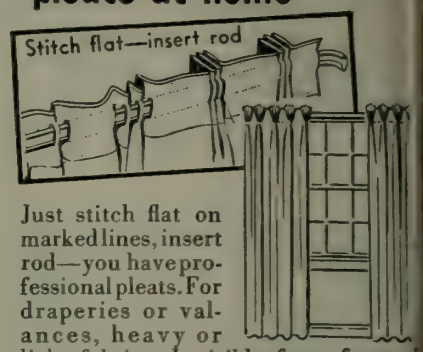
In keeping up with Dame Fashion, most women sacrifice whatever naturally good posture they may have had. Nature just isn't equipped to correct a body thrown completely out of balance by ill-fitting shoes and stiltlike heels. Nor does a man help his posture, his spine, or his backaches by tilting himself backward on run-down heels.

A combination of rest, massage, and heat is the best treatment for a simple backache that results from a strain or muscle fatigue. If you have no heat lamp, you can use an electric heater or even a toaster as a source of radiant heat. Direct application of heat via a hot-water bottle or heating pad should also help.

In any case, however, if your backache persists, see your doctor. If you can trace your backache to a fall or an injury, by all means see him.



If it is a psychosomatic backache, only a solution of your mental or emotional problem will help. You may need to see a psychiatrist.

If your backache is caused by some internal trouble—gall bladder, prostate gland, intestines, the uterus, osteomyelitis (an infection in the bone), tumors, tuberculosis, cancer—only a top-notch medical detective can successfully track down the cause and correct it. Once your real organic difficulty is eliminated, your backache, which again merely was a symptom, will disappear. It could be that in another thousand years or so, the very word "backache" will have vanished from our language and will appear only in medical histories. Perhaps by that time Nature will have evolved a stronger network of muscles to support the human back. Perhaps, too, man will have at last mastered the trick of two-legged locomotion. In the meantime, however, take care of your aching back.

when you're older and used to disappointments. Whatever the income, we're trying to prepare her to live cheerfully within it. First as a matter of good sportsmanship. Second because discontent actually threatens rather than stimulates a man's earning power. Third because too many divorces are brought about by extravagant wives.

Are you making your youngster aware of bills and budgets and sensible marketing? Even a trip to the store with your pigtailed tot can be an opening wedge: "No, dear, we can't buy the stuffed olives this time."

"But I like them!"

"We all do. That's why we have them for holidays or company or a special treat. But Daddy works hard for the money we spend. So it's up to the women of the family to plan good meals that still don't cost too much."

The same approach can be used in teaching the folly of waste. The scandal of America's overflowing garbage pails would not be upon us today if our parents had taught us that waste is a sin against marriage. That to throw out good food is equivalent to throwing out hours of a husband's effort. Many parents did preach "waste not, want not," but the lectures didn't take, largely because they weren't put on a matrimonial basis.

To put it bluntly, normal females of all age levels are instinctively interested in getting married. By taking advantage of that instinct you simplify your task of teaching anything, from the art of darning socks to kitchen economics.

Physical

The sex side of being a wife is, of course, important. And it isn't, as was so long thought, a hush-hush business that defies counsel. Sex instruction, given honestly and simply to the young child, leads naturally to the discussion of more complex emotional problems when in adolescence. At such times it is not difficult to refer to the future—to give your daughter sound concepts of the marriage relationship as something decent, fine, and touched with glory. Worth waiting for; and later worth everything it demands in faithfulness, cooperation, and patience.

On the other hand, I think the whole sex issue has been vastly overemphasized in the past decade. And my experience disagrees heartily with those who claim it can be discussed as openly in the home as other matters. Recently I read a frank, fine, but somewhat incredible article wherein the whole family was depicted as chattering sex at the dinner table. With everybody from Aunt Hattie to 6-year-old John contributing either pointed questions, or calm, enlightened replies.

Now this might happen in some families, but I can't imagine it in ours. We would no more think of having a glib group pow-wow about sex over the dinner table, or in any setting, than we would of all suddenly deciding to turn nudist. Sex is to us, and I think to most people, simply too personal—too intimately involved with the most intense and basic emotions. And while children have certain curiosities, they also have certain reticences. They want their problems solved in private.

It's just as bad to be overzealous about preaching sex as it is to be overmodest. Mrs. Lincoln is an acquaintance who made this mistake with her Joan. As a little girl Joan knew "everything," her mother boasted. When Joan began dating, "everything" was hauled out and dusted off for discussion, morning, noon, and night. What happened to the glands when a boy kissed you; how all romance was a prelude to mating. That sort of thing. She turned all Joan's starry-eyed moments into bits of biology, with the result that Joan became disgusted with men altogether and has never married.

It's not necessary to go to extremes either way. Let's prepare our daughters for the finest relationship of life, but let's remember that no individual can ever teach another everything. A large and very valuable share of life is personal discovery. Let's not rob them of their rightful dreams.

Psychological

Are you creating in your daughter right now a sound respect for the vows of marriage? The attitude with which a girl enters marriage can mean its success—or failure.

"Oh well, if it doesn't work out I can always get a divorce." I am ashamed to recall the flippant manner in which so many of us regarded marriage when we were married. Fortunately most of our marriages did work out, but our attitude itself caused a lot of suffering and confusion.

Herewith then the plea that the parents of America get behind the movements for stricter and more uniform divorce laws. And that all of us begin teaching respect for the bonds of matrimony.

While we're at it, let's remind our daughters, as well as our sons, that the minister won't be kidding when he includes "forsaking all others" in the oath. Women who were coquettes in their dating days sometimes have a difficult time forsaking the role. They find it exciting and pleasing to the vanity to keep little side affairs going. Are you teaching your daughter to recognize this ugly, if fascinating, temptation when it rears its head? Are you pointing out its consequences? The outright tragedy. At best the object of pity it makes her husband, of contempt it makes herself. The female philanderer, who betrays the man who is out working to support her, is, if anything, more obnoxious than the male.

Another attitude we mothers and fathers should encourage is that marriage is not a sacrifice but a gain. Yet how many of us, concerned with keeping our darlings

YOU'LL never know about dish towels until you TRY DRY-ME-DRY

by Martex®

How Wonderful! How Different!

They dry dishes and glassware better and faster—dry faster themselves after using, too.

THERE'S nothing like 'em. Dry-Me-Drys are super-absorbent, practically lintless—and they dry themselves in a jiffy! That's because they're a scientific blend of cotton, spun rayon and linen in just the proper amounts—the result of years of research and experimentation by the makers of famous Martex bath towels. Marvelously economical, too, for they wear so well, stay bright and colorful after countless launderings. Try Dry-Me-Drys once—you'll never go back to ordinary towels.

P.S. Martex Dry-Me-Drys are now available in most good stores throughout the country. Ask to see them. Two shown are 18" x 36", one 17" x 34". Pattern A has a variegated colored border with red and blue predominating. Pattern B comes in red, blue, green or orange checks. Pattern C is a color rainbow of gay parallel stripes.

home a little longer, or thinking to warn them, wail—as I heard one do: "Think what you'll be giving up! No more good times. Not so many nice clothes, even. Marriage is always a sacrifice, remember—" The girl married anyway, but she did remember. Marriage was always a "sacrifice" to her, and she has made her own life and that of her husband miserable.

We should, of course, warn our offspring that marriage is not one long honeymoon. This comes as a rude shock to many women. Surely there would be fewer disillusionments, fewer painful quarrels, fewer separations, if all of us, mothers and fathers alike, would coach our daughters for that inevitable time: "No matter how madly a man adores you, it will come. And it won't mean that your marriage was a mistake, or that he loves you any less. Only that he feels secure in you, as a man should. That he's too busy working for you to exert all the effort he did before. . . . But—the woman who keeps her husband comfortable, and herself attractive and pleasant to be with, can keep romance alive. Not in one big ecstatic wave, as at first—but as a sweet, steady, wonderful part of their living together."

Such advice, freely and honestly given by the two people closest to a girl, would be an invaluable wedding present.

In teaching your daughter to be a wife, are you teaching her that just being a wife is the best and freest state ever devised for a woman? That the aforementioned "bonds" of matrimony are, in reality, the keys to a joyous new freedom? Freedom to live openly and fully with the man she chooses. Freedom to have her own house, her own furniture, arrange her life at last in adult and independent patterns. Freedom, in most cases, from being a breadwinner. Sure, marriage frequently means economic worries, but undeniably the husband bears the real burden.

Personally, we don't want our daughter to marry too young. That, too, is part of the training. That she wait until she is old enough to make a sane choice—a man she can be proud of, who will be good to her, with whom she can share her many interests. Old enough, too, to have lived her girlhood to the hilt. We want her to be able to assume the responsibilities and privileges of marriage without regrets.

Are you training your daughter in that most important womanly art of all—getting along with a husband? Granted that all men are not alike, there are still certain fundamentals: A cheerful disposition. Praise and encouragement. Tact, affection. And on the negative side—refraining from nagging, from criticism, from disloyal complaints to others, from being drawn into arguments.

Surely we would see a whole generation of happier marriages if all of us would assume this responsibility now and not lose sight of it. If we, the mothers and fathers of America, would seriously begin girding our girls to be wives!

Wonder tool for the handy man

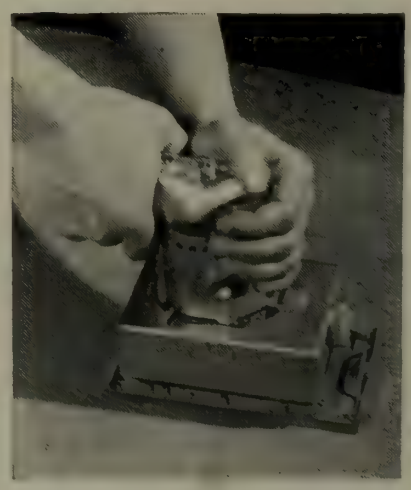
The electric drill

With it you can draft electricity for almost every handy-man job, from drilling a hole to shining a car

By Louis Stockton

If nothing seems to get done around your home, and you blame it on your tools, take a good look at a newcomer to home workshops—the portable electric drill.

Here, in one tool, is the versatility required by the home handy man, who may mend a toy one day, repair a roof gutter the next, and the next day refinish an antique.



You need no special skill to use an electric drill. It is designed for one-hand operation, is light in weight, and is shaped so it may be easily gripped. You can use it anywhere you have access to house current. To change it from one tool to another, you merely release the chuck that holds the accessory, replace the accessory you don't want with the one you do want, and close the chuck. The more you use your drill, the more uses you'll add to those suggested in photographs that follow.

For most home uses, examine the light- and standard-duty portable drills designed for amateur handy men. They cost around $15 and up, with power and price increasing as the speed decreases. The most common chuck holds shafts up to ¼ inch, with adapters for accessories.

You have your choice of a vast number of accessories, from small bits and grinders at less than $1 to major converters beginning at about $10. Look, too, at the vertical and horizontal stands that will hold your drill stationary.

Your choice may be a handy-man kit containing the drill plus an assortment of standard accessories, at a price lower than that of the same pieces bought individually. Later you can add other attachments as you need them.

Specifically for the home hobbyist are small, featherweight, high-speed drills, handy for dozens of precision jobs in woodcrafting, model building, jewelry making, and electrical hobbies. These tools may be purchased at $10 and up, with accessories starting at less than $1.

It saws. Hole-saw attachments cut holes up to two inches in diameter. Guide drill in center helps you locate holes accurately. Still another attachment converts rotary action to back-and-forth action; it holds saw blades for straight or pattern cuts in wood, metal, linoleum, wallboard

It scrapes. To whisk away rust, scale, old paint, or even to clean up that fire-blackened coffeepot, check brush accessories. Here, a wire brush cleans a rusted garden trowel. Finer wire brushes can be used to put a satin finish on metals or to clean stubborn spillovers from kitchen range

It cleans. Removing tarnish from silverware, jewelry, or brass is easy if you use a rag buffing wheel plus a polishing compound. Horizontal stand holds drill firmly and frees both hands for guiding work. Peg in the handle of drill locks trigger so motor runs until trigger is released

It polishes. For a bright, durable shine on furniture, floors, car, or even shoes, buff wax with plastic or rubber disc covered with a lamb's-wool bonnet. If backing disc is flexible, you do a better job on curves. Keep drill moving, and for high luster tilt slightly to take advantage of dry outside edge

It grinds. Jobs such as taking burrs off head of cold chisel can be done with grinding wheel. Wear goggles to protect your eyes from flying steel. More elaborate attachments give you slotted racks so you can sharpen edged tools. Small, pointed grinders rout rust from hard-to-get-at places

It files. Finely machined file attachments smooth rough metal edges. They are especially valuable when you run into a special problem, like routing out a section of pipe. Note also, in foreground, the odd-shaped grinding stones that come in handy for unusual sharpening or shaping

A confidential message to women

(all women!)

The male of the species lags far behind the other sex in one respect at least. He refuses to simplify his daily clothing. Lovely woman, on the other hand, each year reduces her garments in weight or in bulk or in number.... And finally this simplification has reached the harness of supports and fastenings endured so rebelliously "every month."

If you are a rebel, too, you will be more than intrigued by the discoveries of the physician who invented Tampax. As a matter of fact, the basic principle of "internal absorption" was quite well known, but this doctor perfected it to such a degree that women could use it right in their own homes by means of slim, white, disposable applicators containing nothing but pure surgical cotton of great absorbency.

Just imagine yourself forever free from the burden of belts, pins and external pads—no odor, no chafing, no disposal embarrassment.... Just imagine yourself taking showers and tub-baths any time at your own sweet will without bothering to remove the Tampax. And imagine the relief when you know absolutely that the smoothest, snuggest gown or swim-suit can't reveal a bulge or edge or tiny wrinkle caused by Tampax!

The trained nurses know the facts about Tampax, so it is no surprise to find that a large percentage of nurses surveyed, use this product. Young mothers form another enthusiastic group—also students in the famous women's colleges and the big universities of the South and West.

Science is wonderful when on "difficult days" it can ease a woman's mind, increase her social confidence and let her do her work better, whether the job may be in an office, at school or at home. . . . She slips a month's supply of Tampax into her purse and is all prepared for an emergency. Make a note of it now; sold at drug or notion counters. Tampax Incorporated, Palmer, Mass.

What you should know about

Rugs and carpets

By Helen Aves

Your rug can set the color scheme and the atmosphere of your room (page 50) so choose the rug with care. You can change the colors in your upholstery, slipcovers, and walls easily, but you'll want to use the same rug for years. A good quality rug is never overspending if you get what you want.

If you're in the market for a rug, stop, look, and consider these pointers before you go shopping.

What color should the rug be?

Choose gay and cheerful or deep and peaceful colors—whichever you prefer. Colors with character are as practical in rugs as dull colors.

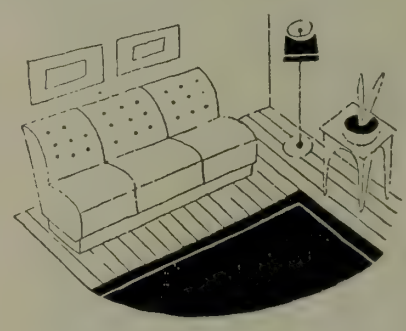
The neutral grays, tans, beiges, and off-whites act as foils for bright accents in your draperies and accessories. You'll find they give a room a smart, restful background and make it look larger, too.

Soft green, rich brown, gray-blue, blue-green, and dusty rose are good bets if you're looking for a safe, long-term rug color. Generally you'll find these middle-value colors.

Cherry, cerise, seal brown, plum, bottle green, charcoal, tobacco, cinnamon, and chocolate brown are full-bodied, high style colors that will give your room a lift and a flair.

Any rug color, particularly in wool, will soften and gray down a bit after a few weeks or months on your floor. It's best to choose a shade slightly richer or brighter than you actually want to allow for graying.

Should the rug be textured?



Rugs are available in new textures—from deep sculptured pile to downright shaggy weaves—so look over the new textures before you decide what kind of rug you'll buy.

Wool or nylon textured rugs get a pebbly, tweedy look by using pile of different heights, cut and uncut pile, and twisted yarns. Sculptured rugs actually have patterns shaved or carved out of their pile. Both textured and sculptured rugs are practical, too, because the patterns won't fight with figured walls and upholstery, and their uneven surface shows less tracking than a smooth one would.

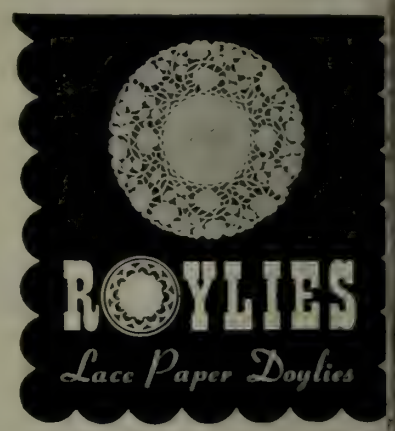
A smooth weave, such as velvet, has a lush, luxurious look and feel – and it's impressive in a formal room or period room. It's useful to tie a room with many jogs into one unit. And smooth weaves—despite the challenge of textured rugs are smart and correct. Whether you choose a nubby or smooth rug is up to you.

What is the best size rug?

Wall-to-wall carpeting gives furniture a luxurious look, makes the room seem larger, and minimizes the cut-up appearance of an irregularly shaped room.

Rug too small

Correct size rug



Room-sized rugs (carpeting or ready-made rugs), laid not more than 8 to 12 inches from the wall in a large room or 4 to 6 inches in a small or medium-sized room, give the room a well-furnished look. Room-sized rugs with a border pull in the apparent floor space – so they're good bets in a large room.

Scatter rugs show off decorative floors—wide planks, black-stained or spatter-dashed finish, marquetry, tile. Small rugs also have a homey charm. Be sure not to use too many or too tiny scatter rugs; fewer rugs of a larger size always look better. Lay scatter rugs on straight lines parallel to walls and each other or to groups of furniture. Place them about one foot apart. Always be sure they're related to furniture groupings, but

How long will the rug wear?

Wear in a rug depends on three things—the compactness of the weave, the thickness of the pile, the materials used in the rug.

Press a finger into the surface of the rug to determine the compactness of the weave and the thickness of the pile. Or walk on the rug—a high, closely packed pile is springy underfoot.

You can tell the materials used from the label on the rug. Here's a handy guide to the different kinds of materials.

Wool is resilient and not easily worn out. Wool rugs absorb noise. A good wool or wool-mixture rug, whatever its surface appearance, has a thick pile that feels springy when you squeeze it. Density of pile is more important than its depth, since many fine rugs have short pile, many poor rugs have long pile.

Mohair (which comes from the Angora goat) is a lustrous, resilient, long-wearing yarn and often has a silky sheen.

Silk itself has a lovely sheen—but it won't stand heavy traffic. You'll find silk used most often in Oriental rugs.

Cotton is fairly firm and less springy than wool. Cotton is mixed with wool in inexpensive domestic rugs or used alone in braided, hooked, shag, or chenille rugs. Cotton cleans or launders beautifully. Best quality shag rugs are shrinkproof, have heavy canvas backs and stitching in straight close rows. Best quality braided or hooked rugs lie perfectly flat.

Linen, fiber, and grass rugs come in smart plain colors and patterns suitable for year-round use in Modern and in warm-climate homes. They're closely woven to take lots of wear; most are reversible and hard to soil. A good rug of linen, grass, or fiber, or a mixture of any of these materials with cotton or wool, has straight edges, lies perfectly flat, feels thick and heavy in the hand. Both sides are equally well-finished without knots or stray ends showing. A pure linen rug is mothproof and guaranteed fireproof.

Nylon rugs are newcomers to the rug field. Nylon carpeting has a frosty look, an unlimited color range, and a luxurious spring. Nylon is extra durable, smooth-fibered. It's easy to clean, slow to soil. Nylon rugs are shrinkproof, practically mothproof, and non-inflammable.

Rayon rugs are made from special rayon fibers that are heavier and sturdier than dress rayons. Rayons are used alone or blended with wool, cotton, or other fibers.

What weave should you choose?

Don't judge quality of the rug by its weave. In each weave there are high and lower grades, so no one weave is best. Each weave, though, has special characteristics, and one weave may suit you better than the others. Broadloom is not a special weave or brand name. It's simply a term used to describe any carpet

The story of a house

The people in the picture above bought a Five Star Home plan at a home-planning center; they went through the necessary financing; they got an architect, a builder; they furnished the house and moved in. They've been through it all. They're the Watsons, Pete and Mary, Susie, and little Pete. You can share their experience in "The Story of A House," a color movie now being shown by department and furniture stores across the country. The 30-minute film, produced by Sarra, Inc., under the technical supervision of the editors of Better Homes & Gardens, tells a step-by-step story of the building and furnishing of a home. "The Story of A House" is full of good ideas you won't want to miss.

Step by step you see the living room take shape. The Watsons' color scheme and furniture arrangement will give you ideas for your own h

HARDWICK

First in Cooking Performance

First in Value

Choose a Hardwick Table Top Model if you prefer the counter height range with divided top burners and stainless steel burner grids. Oversize balanced heat oven is 18" wide, holds 30 lb. roaster. Smokeless broiler with aluminum broiler pan. Cracker crisper bins. Towel racks. Cooking top and oven light.

Most large stores and gas companies, many schools and institutions run independent laboratory tests on gas ranges. HARDWICK welcomes such tests. Unsolicited letters from all over the country tell of their results. A fair summary of the many letters is: "Our tests show that Hardwick Gas Ranges are FIRST in cooking performance and FIRST in dollar for dollar value." That is why so many of the nation's leading stores and gas companies feature HARDWICK GAS RANGES.

Where can I see the new Hardwick?

A post card will bring you the name of your nearest Hardwick dealer. Look at the new Hardwicks. Examine their sturdy construction, study their beautiful classic designs that are so easy to clean and keep clean—that will stay new looking through many years of trouble-free operation. Compare their extra features with other ranges point by point. Talk to women who own Hardwicks. Then you'll know HARDWICK is the range you want.

The Hardwick Challenger brings you easy, restful UPPER LEVEL COOKING . . . no bending, no stooping, no peeking. Rite-Hite Oven with Mirro-Magic oven door (light on, it's a window; light off, it's a mirror). Roll-A-Door, Rite-Hite smokeless broiler. Floodlighted, hinged cooking top. Simmer-set burner valves. Stainless steel burner grids. Three big storage drawers for pans and utensils. Slide-out drip pan, full size of cooking top, to catch boilovers. Automatic time clock (optional on deluxe models). Choice of right or left oven.

. . . and when you see the price tag you'll know you've found a bargain!

Cave o[f the] Winds, nearby, is a commerci[al] attraction, as are most hereab[outs].

from Sunset to Sunrise Point will give you the feel of the place. All of the formations look different by morning light, so retrace some of the route covered the afternoon before.

Zion National Park

The towering walls and the vivid coloring of Zion hit you with an emotional impact as you stop to look out through windows cut in the mile-long highway tunnel. A series of switchbacks brings the road to the bottom of the canyon. Then, the road threads its way alongside the Virgin River to the Temple of Sinawava. Towering walls box you in, some more than 3,000 feet high, almost straight up. Stop along the drive for a good look at the more famous landmarks —Court of the Patriarchs, Great White Throne, Angels' Landing, and others. You may have time for a short hike part way up either the East or West Rim trails for different views.

Grand Canyon National Park

Grand Canyon cannot be adequately described—a great gash 4 to 18 miles wide and nearly a mile deep, with everything on a massive scale. Your first view will take your breath away. John Burroughs called it "The Divine Abyss." If you arrive on schedule, you will have time to visit two view points on the North Rim the afternoon you get there. Inquire of a ranger as to which you can make in the time you have. In going from the North to South Rim you cross the Colorado River over the famous Navajo Bridge, and pass through a corner of the N. Reservation. On the South the road skirts the canyon for 40 miles. Frequent turnouts le viewpoints. Make all of t they are all different. And be to go beyond the village 8 mi Hermit's Rest. See the s from some place along this drive. Art galleries, the House, and campfire festivitie occupy your evening. You wi have time for the mule trip the canyon as it requires a day.

Petrified Forest National Monument

Visit the museum and logs by and at least two of the separate forests. Each is diffe Petrified log chunks are si about the landscape, many of as colorful as gems.

Painted Desert

This seemingly endless ex of colorful mounds and hi stretches away to the distant zon for miles. One of the best is from highway 66. It is not n sary to make the rim drive.

Mesa Verde National Park

Nestling under overhanging are numerous cliff dwellings cupied by Indians some 6(1,000 years ago. Short drives to where you can view the l ruins, some of which can be v by trail. Mesa Verde will b cidedly different from any you've seen on the entire trip building to the west is the Civic Center. It houses both city and county governments. If you wish to see more of Denver, take time to visit the Old Court House Plaza, Cheesman and City Parks (and Zoo), and Elitch's Gardens.

Rocky Mountain National Park

If you have energy left after the hikes suggested under the day-by-day schedule, hike to the top of Flattop Mountain, for a panoramic sweep of the country you covered the previous three days, plus the marvelous view of Long's Peak to the south, the Gore Range to the southwest, and the Mummy and Never Summer Ranges north and west. If you go in for mountain climbing, you may want to try 14,255-foot Long's Peak. The trail starts from Long's Peak Campground, reached by side road from Route 7 about 9 miles south of Estes Park. The hike to the Boulder Field is not difficult, but from there on the climb is steep and treacherous and should not be made without a guide. Inquire of Park Rangers as to trip details and guide service that is available to you.

The eighth day, while only a 50-mile drive, will take you through new, thrilling areas in the Park. Don't start too late for you will want to make many stops, the first at Deer Ridge, where the Moraine Park Road joins Trail Ridge Road. The next, Many Parks Curve for the view of the impressive peaks in the Mummy Range to the north, most of them over 13,000 feet. About 10 miles farther is the Monument Ridge parking area from where you see the Gorge Lakes off to the south.

Stop also at Iceberg Lake, about 2 miles farther along. There are few more impressive sights than from the Summit (12,138 feet), just beyond Iceberg. Visit the Fall River Museum, with its exhibits of the geologic story of the Park, and its animal and plant life. Five miles beyond is Milner Pass, where you cross the Continental Divide. The majestic mountains ahead are the Never Summer Range. Probably your last stop will be at Far View Curve, where you get a spectacular view of the valley through which winds the north fork of the Colorado River. And then on to Grand Lake.

Grand Lake

This is one of Colorado's largest lakes and its deepest. It is almost surrounded by the national park, but is not a part of it. The lake lies at about 8,400 feet and is said to be the highest yacht anchorage in the world. Yacht races are usually held in August. There are ample accommodations in Grand Lake Village, but get there an hour or two before sundown.

As the next day's drive is a short one of only about 80 miles, you can stay around Grand Lake until midmorning, but you will want to take your time on the drive to Idaho Springs as there is much to see. After leaving Granby, you pass through Middle Park, one of the high Colorado valleys rir mountains. Beyond Frase west end of Moffatt Tunnel six miles through James P cost of $18,000,000. On grade to the crest of Berth (11,314 feet) and the breatl sweep of country below yc

The seething cauldron beneath this high volcanic plateau produces phenomena that run the gamut from little steam vents to big-throated Old Faithful. You will see geyser basins at West Thumb, Norris Junction, and near Old Faithful. Equally scenic are the Yellowstone, Firehole, and Madison Rivers, and Yellowstone Lake.

Glacier has the ruggedness of the Tetons, the best of the Colorado Rockies, and variety, but it is unlike any other national park. By Mary Novak

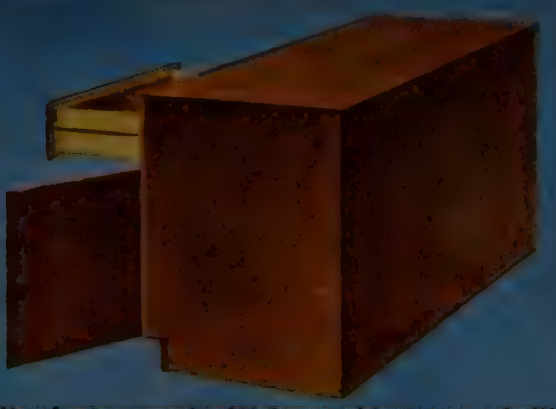
John and I were married in depression years, and when the chance came to buy a 47-year-old house on a lot 50 by 150 feet for $1,500, we took it. It was a square house with a high hipped roof, an outside basement entrance, and a basement that was not cemented. Siding and windows were beyond repair; even the glass panes were not square. Roofing and downspouts needed to be replaced. The only redeeming feature—outside of cost, cheap even for 1937—was the structural wood, which was better than you can get today.



To make it fit our vision of a modern home, we lost little time in starting to remodel.

Though John did the designing, we hired a contractor to lower the roof and widen the chimney, finish the basement with concrete, add a furnace, and build on the additions. The finishing and interior work, however, we did ourselves.

Inside, we first interchanged the bedroom and kitchen. This gave the bedroom [Turn to page 244 a southwest instead of north exposure, and provided a back door instead of a side service door. We knocked out the partition between the larger bedroom and living room, to get a 25- by 13-foot living room. A new garage, stoop, entrance hall, and closet were added to the living room. Glass block in the outside wall of the hall was put in to flood the room with light.

We kept the old cherry woodwork, after removing all gingerbread and dressing it up with a coat of putty-colored paint. When we put in larger windows, we used a natural finish on them to go with our furniture.

We had two problems in the living room: where to put our musical apparatus, and how to hide a protruding brick chimney. We solved the first problem by building all our equipment into one wall (page 242), allowing storage space for recordings. We have one speaker just above eye level, the other on the opposite wall at floor level. They give us perfect reception.

The second problem (see picture below) we solved by covering the chimney with plywood and building a desk into the remaining recess. It is made from two oak desks that we bought for $2. The desk chair was resurrected from a friend's basement and re-covered.

When we moved in, the bathroom didn't even have a tub. We built cabinets, and installed a secondhand lavatory we picked up for $2. The floor is now covered with rust-colored tile we repolished and laid for $30.

In a corner of our relocated kitchen, John built this revolving unit for me. The outside was made from the framework of a roll-top desk. The unit holds all my pots and pans where I can find them without rummaging. We bought pine cabinets unfinished, stained them golden yellow, then varnished them. Counter top is brown. Sink we moved from the old bathroom.

Jutting chimney in living room we camouflaged with plywood (right). Rest of built-in unit is a desk made from parts of an old desk—pigeonholes re-used intact, roll top used as door. Typewriter cabinet was made from breadboards

Stirred Custard

3 slightly beaten eggs
¼ to ½ cup sugar
¼ teaspoon salt
2 cups milk, scalded
½ teaspoon vanilla

Combine eggs, sugar, and salt; gradually stir in hot milk. Cook in double boiler over hot water until mixture coats spoon, stirring constantly. Add vanilla. Serve plain or pour over orange sections and coconut. Chill. Serves 6.

Floating Island

Use recipe for Stirred Custard, above. Pour custard into serving dish to cool. Make a Meringue: Add ⅛ teaspoon salt and ¼ teaspoon vanilla to 2 egg whites; beat to stiff foam. Add ¼ cup sugar, a tablespoon at a time, and continue beating until mixture forms moist, lustrous peaks. Drop in small mounds on top of chilled custard; dot with jelly and serve at once. Meringue mounds may be baked or browned in broiler before placing on custards, if desired. Serves 6.

Baked Custard

Use recipe for Stirred Custard, above. Pour mixture into individual custard cups or 1-quart baking dish; sprinkle with nutmeg. Place custards in shallow pan. Pour hot water into pan—1 inch deep. Bake in moderate oven (325°) until mixture doesn't adhere to knife. Serve in custard cups; or spoon from baking dish into sherbets. Serve with wafers or butter cookies.

How to stop ROT

You can apply new wood preservatives by brush, spray, or dip. You can paint over the They curb fungi and boring insects

By John Webster

IT'S getting easier every day for you to curb rot and terr damage around your home.

New liquid wood preservatives are being sold by hardw paint, and department stores and lumberyards. You can put t on by brushing, spraying, or dipping. You can paint over th You don't have to heat them. Any odor will quickly disapp They double or triple the life of lumber used outdoors.

These preservatives are sold under many brand names, but home use the best are those containing pentachlorophenol, c per naphthenate, or zinc naphthenate.

All three come dissolved in some oil solvent. They are insolu in water. If you plan to paint over a preservative, choose a p servative that has a light, volatile oil solvent.

Also due on the market soon is a new aluminum paint trea to resist rot and termites.

Look over the three, and decide which will fit your job:

Pentachlorophenol solutions are clear, if a quality oil solver used. Cheaper solutions using cruder oil are satisfactory for s uses as below-ground protection. Petroleum solvent solutions r injure young plants; they're not recommended where roots touch them. Pentachlorophenol solutions often are sold combi with a water repellent. [Turn to page

Apply preservative to joints of a window frame with a medicine dropper—a few drops is enough. This is especially valuable on the inside, if the moisture condenses on the glass and runs down

Apply a preservative to the exposed edge of the bottom row of shingle siding. For this, use a hook made of a scrap of wood covered with a pad of burlap and nailed to a handle. Hold preservative-soaked burlap against shingle edge at least a minute

To put preservative on a series of small, inaccessible joints, such as in shutters, use a fly sprayer. Avoid overdosage and you won't impair movement of joints. Spray all of new shutters

Copper naphthenate solutions are green, and can be used without paint if green is the color you want. The treated wood is harmless to plants. If you plan to paint over the green color, ask your dealer whether you should seal it with aluminum paint or shellac.

Zinc naphthenate solutions are clear, somewhat more expensive than the other two, can be used under varnish if you want to preserve the natural beauty of the wood. They can also be put on bare or unpainted basement walls, or on concrete, to curb mildew.

All three are unpalatable to boring insects and the fungi that cause rot. As they protect only so far as they penetrate, it's best to use them on clean, dry, unpainted wood. One coat will do the job; two coats are better. Apply the second coat before the first is dry. One gallon will cover up to 400 square feet of lumber.

When you use these preservatives, give most attention to wood that will touch the ground, to places where two pieces of wood fit tightly together, to areas where moisture collects, and to joints between wood and other building materials. That's where rot starts.

Wear gloves; the oil solvent may irritate your skin.

You may be able to buy lumber pressure-treated with a preservative. That treatment is much more effective than hand application. You may decide the extra cost of treated lumber is cheap insurance against rot and termites, especially for sills, doors, jambs, joists, and window frames. However, if you saw or drill through treated wood, you should use a preservative on the exposed places.

The pictures will show you where and how to apply these preservatives effectively yourself.

Places that are hard to get at often are the spots that need preservative the most. Here, a bent-spout squirt can is being used to apply preservative to the front edge and underside of a doorsill. Treat places where wood joins masonry, brick, concrete, or metal—any place where water can collect

You can get a nasty fall if your ladder breaks while you're aboard. Such breaks usually are caused by rot in the joints where the rungs fit into the side rails. To stay on the safe side, soak those joints with preservative—and use it liberally. If your ladder is to be stored outside, treat all of it thoroughly

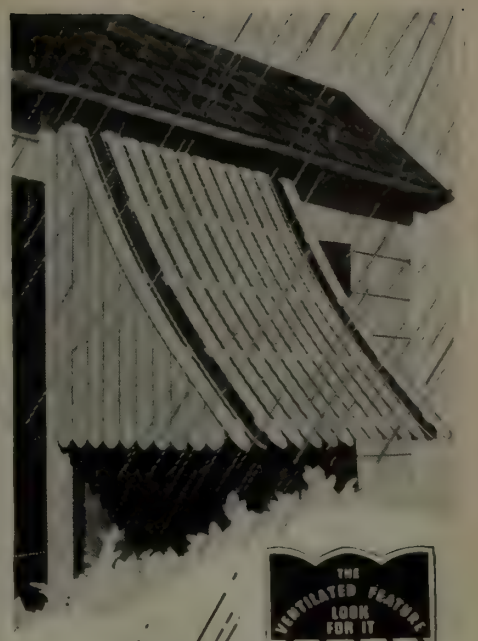
Any wood that touches the ground or is exposed to weather is in danger. So give it all the protection you can with preservative. Turn wooden garden furniture upside down and coat the bottom of the legs liberally with preservative. You'll do well to treat the joints of all lawn furniture, too



If you have wooden gutters, treat the entire inside length and rim. And treat both inside and underside of the gutter where it meets the metal downspout. If you can get at them, treat the joints between gutter and the house with a squirt can

Don't forget to treat the bottom edge of your garage door with preservative. Use a brush to apply it to an overhead door; for other types use application hook or a squirt can Somebody forget a cigarette? Don't worry — it can't hurt the Plastic-on-Steel top.

With the new Plastic-on-Steel table top, it's your pride and joy for years

A smart combination of colorful beauty and sturdy quality. Created by Lloyd, pioneer in the development of chrome-plated furniture.

The table top is smooth, satiny plastic, laminated to steel. It can't be harmed by burning cigarettes (the steel acts as a heat conductor), by boiling water, alcohol, or fruit acids. Nor does it fade or stain.

The comfortable chairs are covered in a new long-wearing plastic material. The chrome plating is extra heavy. Its loveliness lasts for years and years.

And it's no trick at all to keep your Lloyd dinette set as bright as a new dime. Just use soap and water on the table top and chair coverings and a dry cloth on the chrome parts.

Brown on all sides in hot fat, place on rack; add hot water; cover tightly. Cook over low heat or in slow oven (325°) 2 hours. More water may need to be added if cooked on top of range. Remove cord before serving. Serves 6 to 8.

Baked Ham

Place ham, fat side up, in a shallow roasting pan. Bake, uncovered in slow oven (300°), the time depending on type of ham. The old-style Virginia ham requires 25 minutes per pound for 10- to 12-pound hams, 20 minutes for large hams. (Roast-meat thermometer should read 170°.)

Modern type hams processed in packing plants are more mildly cured and require only 15 minutes per pound. (Roast-meat thermometer should read 160°.)

About ½ hour before ham is done, take from oven and spread with 1 cup brown sugar heated with 2 tablespoons water. Return to oven to glaze and to finish baking.

Raisin Sauce

½ cup brown sugar
1½ tablespoons cornstarch
1 cup water
½ cup seedless raisins
1½ tablespoons lemon juice
1 tablespoon butter or fortified margarine

Mix brown sugar and cornstarch. Add water; and cook until thick and clear, stirring constantly. Add raisins, cover, and let stand over very low heat 10 to 15 minutes. Add lemon juice and butter; mix well. Serve with ham.

Leg of Lamb

Order leg of lamb, French style. If desired, rub with cut clove of garlic or ask meatman to insert slivers of garlic with larding needle. Season with salt and pepper and place, fat side up, on a rack in a shallow, open roasting pan. Roast in slow oven (300°) 30 to 35 minutes per pound. Roast-meat thermometer should read 175° to 180°, depending on degree of doneness preferred.

Stuffed Mushrooms

8 large mushrooms
¼ cup chopped mushroom stems
3 tablespoons butter or fortified margarine
¼ cup fine bread crumbs
¼ cup chopped cooked ham
1 tablespoon grated onion
1 teaspoon chopped parsley
2 tablespoons milk to moisten
¼ cup fine bread crumbs
1 tablespoon melted butter or fortified margarine
2 tablespoons grated Parmesan cheese

Wash mushrooms carefully and remove stems. Cook chopped mushroom stems in the butter for a few minutes without browning. Add next five ingredients, mix well, and pile into caps. with a series of vertical louvers that can be opened and closed by a thermostatically controlled motor. During winter months when the house needs heat from the entire glass area, the louver thermostat, which is set a few degrees higher than the furnace thermostat, opens the upper louvers and lets the sun in. When the house has reached the desired temperature, the louvers are automatically closed until the house again calls for heat.

"As the sun moves across the sky it is important that the louvers open at an angle that will let the sun's rays come into the house unobstructed. To assure this, an electric eye is mounted on one of the louvers and, as they start their opening swing, the electric eye rides with the louvers until sunlight hits it. When this happens, the circuit is broken. the motor operating the louvers shuts off, and they become fixed parallel to the rays of the sun. When the sun sets, the louvers continue their turn and close for the night. When the solar heat fails to bring up the room temperature, the furnace thermostat starts our heating plant.

"Control of the sun is just as necessary in winter as it is in summer. A year ago January, before we got the louvers installed, the temperature in the house went as high as 90 degrees with no heat from the furnace between 10 o'clock in the morning and 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

"To save expense I put a basement under the living room only. The wings of the house are built on the ground. that's woven seamless (on a broad loom) in widths of 3 to 30 feet.

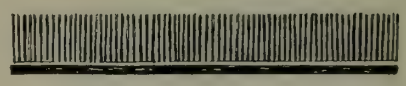
Carpeting is woven in loops called pile. If these loops are left intact, the rug is said to have uncut pile. When the top of these loops is clipped, the rug has cut pile.



Check the quality of the weave by the density of the pile—you shouldn't be able to see the backing when you look down into the pile.

These are the common rug weaves:

Axminster is the most-used American rug weave because it is most popularly priced, and it can be made in an unlimited number of patterns and colors. Axminsters have long, thick, deep, cut pile that gives the rug an easy feel underfoot. The longer and denser the pile the greater wear you can expect.

Uncut pile

Pile with tops of loops cut

Velvet weaves have short, compact, cut pile; they are often made in solid colors. Frieze is a velvet weave made from a twisted yarn which gives the surface a pebbly look and hides footprints. Tapestry is an uncut velvet weave.

Wilton rugs have a velvety surface with thick, compact, erect, cut pile. Grade for grade, Wilton wears longest of any weave. Wiltons are made from short-fibered woolen yarns (and called wool Wiltons), or from long-fibered worsted yarns (and called worsted Wiltons). Worsted yarns give the rug a subtle sheen, make the best-wearing carpets.

Wiltons are usually limited in their colors, however, since a frame is required for each colored yarn and only five or six frames can be used on one rug. Brussels rugs might be called uncut Wiltons since they have a short uncut pile woven on the same type of loom.

Chenille weaves have the thickest, deepest pile of them all. Chenille rugs can be made seamless in widths up to 30 feet in any shape, pattern, or color.

Smyrna weaves are reversible, or double-faced, with pile on both sides of the carpet.

Orientals are hand-woven; each tuft is separately tied with a special knot. Each rug is valued separately for age, rarity, beauty of color and design, quality of wool, length of pile, and fineness and number of knots. Antique Orientals are those woven 50 or more years ago.

Flat weave rugs have no pile; they're woven, felted, hooked, knit or braided by machine or by hand.

Is a rug pad a must?

Yes, a good rug pad prolongs the life of a rug or carpet by years.

Tests have proved that pads actually increase rug life 75 to 100 percent. The pad smooths out unevenness of the floor and distributes the shock of traffic. It protects the rug backing from dryness or damp. A pad also acts as a good insulator and deadens room noises. The finest pads are made of cowhair, jute, rubber, or latex.

Rug pads should be slightly smaller than the rug so that the edges will lap over smoothly. Rug pads with a raised design on one side should be laid smooth side up. Hair and jute pads may be cleaned with a vacuum cleaner with the brush or beater disconnected—not with a carpet sweeper or broom. Rubber or latex padding can be cleaned with vacuum cleaner or soap and water.

What is the best way to lay carpeting?

Let the dealer solve the problems of laying your carpet—he's an expert. If the carpet isn't properly fitted to allow for changes in humidity it may shrink or pucker. Whenever possible keep the seams out of the line of constant traffic.

How should stair carpeting be laid?

Stair carpeting should have a thick, tight pile. Install it with underlays of rug cushioning, especially at step edges, to get the most wear. Stair carpet should be cut 8 to 12 inches longer than necessary with the extra length folded under in one or two risers at the top. Then you can shift the carpet an inch or two downward when it begins to show wear over the nose of the tread. Worn sections will be hidden on the risers.

Shift carpet down so worn spots would be on risers, and fresh carpet on treads highly centralized government takes control of any phase of our national life.

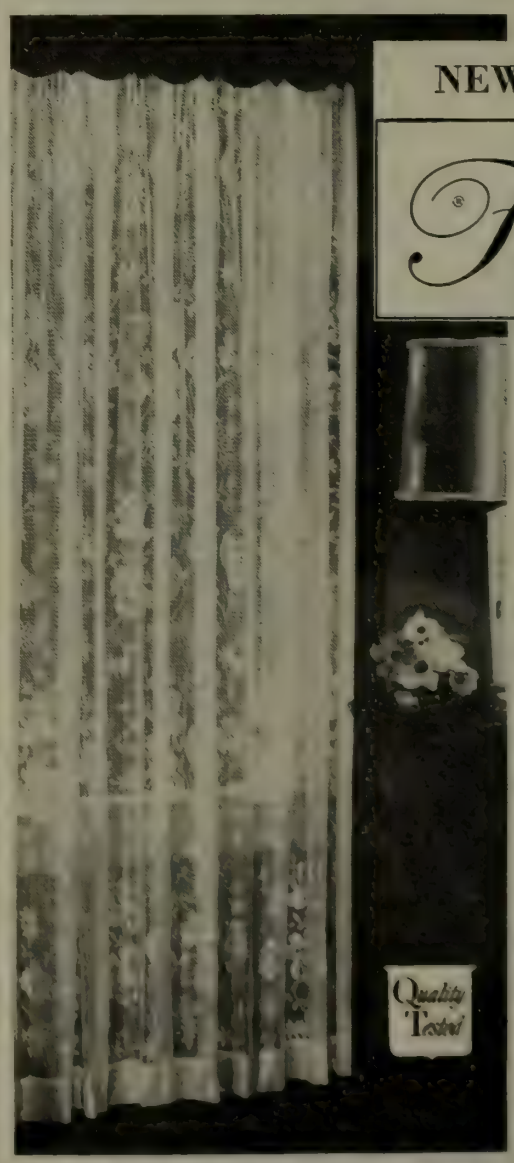
What will be the value of equality of opportunity for our children if their minds are not free? What good is cultural literacy if what children are to learn shall be dictated by preconceived ideological notions of those in power?



There are some who believe that such questions are without merit, that never would it be possible for our government to become the dictator and arbiter of our American way of life. It is very likely that the Germans did not believe that the National Socialist Party, when it came into power, would capture the minds of German youth, but it did. All of the vaunted literacy of Russian children produces only closed minds when an arbitrary government, financing the educational process, determines what the truth is and how it is to be taught.

Loss of freedom of action, speech, and thought is the inevitable outcome when any government becomes so centralized and powerful that it exercises disciplinary control over the life of a people. History is replete with instances which give validity to this statement.

In colleges and universities now, more than half of the young people are taken care of by institutions independent of tax support, a which exist as free institutions our society. The other half recei its education through institutic supported by the states, with so secondary assistance through loa and grants from the federal g ernment.

But the present bill and legis tion contemplated for future acti will ultimately result in a federa controlled system which will fi of all absorb the state-support institutions and finally swall up the last of our great free insti tions, the privately endow schools. For when the federal g ernment enters directly into t solution of these problems, a other great federal bureaucra will be established. The existi state mechanisms for educatio administration will be overbu dened, and attempts of bo groups to perpetuate themselves office will inevitably follow. In a conflict between the state and t federal government, there is on one winner.

I have no quarrel with the an ysis of our national educatio problem as it has been made by t advocates of federal aid. But I a whether states could not do t job themselves if they were willi to effect economies in administr tion, eliminating marginal and i relevant functions, simplifying t assessing and collecting of taxe and in general putting first things first in state and county government. The validity of this assumption is clear to anyone who is familiar with the archaic system of government existing in the majority of our states.

If the federal government would make educational grants to the states and insist on certain economies of state management, a greater efficiency in state administration would result. And we wouldn't be saddled with a new federal bureaucracy. Many federal legislators would like to see this policy followed. But there is a strong and compelling group, influential in high places, who want no such reasonable and efficient procedure. These people are definitely committed to the idea of a paternalistic federal government. And its ultimate outcome would be a highly controlled form of state socialism. Herein lies the hazard and the peril.

I have said the Thomas Bill is not the end. The President's Advisory Commission on Higher Education recently issued a report which has, on the whole, been approved by the President and his

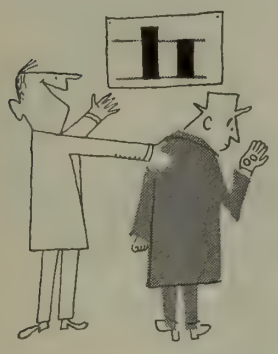
How good is panel heating?



Not very, say skeptics. We like it, say those who have lived with it

In Sun Valley you can sunbathe with your shirt off in freezing weather. Your body absorbs heat radiated by the sun, and you are comfortable, though the air around you is cold.

On this fact is based the theory of radiant panel heating for homes—warming occupants of a room by heat rays from built-in panels. You can get this heat from pipes laid in a concrete floor, or from coils built into the ceiling or walls of your home. The story of panel heat is dramatic. It's also a true story: Panel heating can keep you warm in a cold room. But is it better than other home heating systems? Is it only a newfangled idea with serious drawbacks?

Since it first gained prominence, radiant panel heating has been the subject of debate. Below, Better Homes & Gardens presents the criticisms its editors commonly hear, together with comments by homeowners who live in radiantly heated houses and by manufacturers of radiant-heating equipment.

HIGH COST

Criticism:

Panel heating costs about 20 percent more to install than comparable heating systems of other types. Thicker insulation is required with radiant heat, and reflective insulation must be added, since heat rays are involved. So up go costs of installation still further.

Comment:

Owners of homes heated by panels say that cost of installation is about the same as that of a conventional hot-water system. Cost of operation—fuel cost—is lower than with other systems, regardless of the type of fuel used.

Insulation does its job regardless of the type of heating, and any statement that reflective insulation is required is completely false.

COLD FEET

Criticism:

Your legs and feet may be cold when they are under a table or desk, and thus shielded from the heat rays of a ceiling installation.

Comment:

No homeowners interviewed notice cold on legs or feet. If you lie in the sun on a spring day with your feet in the shade of a tree, your feet don't get cold. The principle is the same.

HOT HEADS

Criticism:

The high temperature of a radiant panel installed in the ceiling may make you uncomfortable when ceilings are as low as 7½ feet. And when the ceiling is too high, it may be impossible to get adequate heat.

Comment:

Owners do not complain of feeling too much heat on their heads when standing below ceiling installations. In fact, they are enthusiastic in contending that panel heat is the most comfortable they have ever experienced.

Ceiling heights as low as 7½ feet are rare and not good architecture. At the other extreme, rooms with 20-foot ceilings are being satisfactorily heated by radiant coils.

Hot floors

Criticism: Temperatures above 95 degrees may soften and damage linoleum cement, may dry out wood flooring, and may cause carpet fibers to deteriorate within five years. When the floor is heated below 85 degrees, a fairly safe point, you may not get enough heat to keep warm. That limits the range of operation rather closely. A change in floor covering may throw the whole system out of balance, for there is a difference in heat transmitting qualities of various floor coverings.

Comment: Though several owners of homes heated by panels complain that bare concrete is hard on their feet, they are not bothered when concrete is covered with rugs and pads. Carpeting, hardwood, linoleum, and asphalt tile have not affected the heating ability of floor panels.

True, 95 degrees may be too hot for most floor materials, but 95 degrees should never be reached. Temperatures should vary between 75 and 92 degrees, and good quality floor coverings should not be damaged within that range.

Heat absorption

Criticism: Furniture absorbs radiant rays in the same way your body does. When the temperature of furniture rises, it heats the air, thus putting an end to the fallacy about being warm in a "cold" room. Floors and walls also absorb heat and warm the air by convection.

Comment: If room surfaces could be made hot enough, you could be comfortable with a very low air temperature, but this is neither desirable nor practical. The truth is that you can be comfortable in rooms heated by panels with slightly lower air temperatures than with other systems.

Leaks

Criticism: It's true that leaks are not likely to occur in a carefully installed system. Yet some manufacturers recommend that you keep a copy of the blueprint locating all the joints in the system.

Comment: Though panel-heating systems as old as 20 years are still providing trouble-free service, having a blueprint on hand is an excellent idea as accident insurance. No piping system is 100 percent foolproof. This is no more a disadvantage in panel heating than in any system of pipes.

No air movement

Criticism: A panel heating system in the ceiling doesn't put any air in motion in a room. Cigar or cigarette smoke may hang motionless in layers, rather than mixing with the air throughout the room.

Comment: Any surface that is heated above the temperature of the air in a room will make that air move. But motionless air isn't desirable; neither is a current of warm air. What panel heating does is reduce air motion and eliminate cold drafts and dust-disturbing currents.

Dust

Criticism: While ceiling panels cause no air to move, installations of panels in the floor will cause a movement of air, because air in contact with the floor rises as it warms. This current of air tends to lift dust off the floor and keep it in the air.

Comment: Owners' statements contradict this. They say that draperies, walls, and furniture stay clean longer than with other systems. More than half add that they have had fewer colds since moving into a house heated by panels, largely because of reduced drafts, dust, and dirt.

Controls

Criticism: One manufacturer says that a heating panel in a concrete floor 4 inches thick "may cause a virtually insurmountable control problem" in a house with large window areas, and built of frame construction. Reason is the large difference in the heat transmitting qualities of concrete, glass, and wood.

Comment: How to control the temperature of a room heated by radiant panels is still a controversial question. Research shows, though, that the same controls used for conventional hot-water systems can be used equally well with panel heating. In the average home, panel heating isn't hard to control; it's less conventional construction—such as great expanses of glass—that makes temperature control difficult, regardless of the type of heat used.

service

Again this month your service column is devoted entirely to answering questions on child care and training. The responses below are taken direct from the pages of the Better Homes & Gardens Baby Book.

Q Our little boy is 3 now and has begun to stammer in his speech. Is this a serious matter or will he grow out of it?

A Somewhere around the age of 3, many children begin to stutter, and again the parents are worried. There is no particular need to be, for a child who has talked properly once has shown that he possesses the speech mechanism to do so again. Perhaps your child is overtired or emotionally strained. However, if the condition continues, expert help should be sought.

Q What is the best way to remove crust from baby's head?

A If crust called "cradle cap" forms on the scalp, wash hair daily, soaping and rinsing well. Soften crust on scalp with an application of oil at night.

Q How soon should bowel training be started?

A Most doctors suggest that bowel training wait until the baby can sit up strongly. The little toilet seat may then be put over the bathroom stool, and much fuss and bother is saved. But there is no harm in beginning, any time after the movements have become regularized, to try to catch them in a chamber.

The Better Homes & Gardens Baby Book is really two books in one—a complete and authoritative child care and training guide, prenatal through the sixth year; and a useful record book. More than 750,000 mothers are users of the Better Homes & Gardens Baby Book.

You can get your copy at infants' wear, book, and department stores everywhere. Or send your order direct to Better Homes & Gardens, 5504 Meredith Bldg., Des Moines 3, Iowa.

Take care of your dog's teeth and avoid costly dental treatment

By Russell K. Lowry

Some of my dog's teeth are working loose, and his breath is awful. His teeth are packed with tartar around the gums and many are bleeding. How can I prevent this condition?—A. W. A., Illinois.

A dog's teeth are subject to the same troubles as a human's—tartar deposits, cavities, pyorrhea, dental fistulas. Right from the start, a dog's teeth need brushing. It's a regular ritual in all well-run kennels. Believe it or not, lots of owners write us they have their dogs' teeth examined twice a year (orchids to them!). A good, economical tooth powder is 1 part salt, 1 part mild soap chips, 1 part pumice powder, 2 parts baking soda. Use a human-type nail brush. Scrub thoroughly, then rinse the dog's mouth. Pick out any imbedded food deposits, too. In your dog's case, have a veterinarian scrape off tartar and treat the remaining teeth to save those he can.

I recently got a 5-weeks-old female Cocker Spaniel as a companion for my children. But we don't intend to go into the dog-breeding business. Will it ruin the dog to have her spayed?—Mrs. W. B., Illinois.

Spaying often takes spirit out of a female. She becomes lazy, develops a big appetite, and grows fat. Aged spayed females sometimes develop complication such as losing bladder control. I wouldn't have it done to a female dog of mine, but many do.

Should we feed our dog raw eggs, and how often should he have them?—C. L., Maine.

Most dogs have trouble in handling egg whites, are even allergic to them. Feed only the yolks. Yolks are excellent for dogs. Stir a yolk into a pan of warmed milk every other day as a light morning meal.

Our dog disappears all day, comes home only to eat and sleep. I whip him, but he does the same thing the next day. How can I teach him to stay at home?—R. P. S., Idaho.

It's almost impossible to cure a roamer, once he finds excitement elsewhere. The only thing you can do is confine your dog in the house or in a fenced enclosure. If you do this, the idea of roaming will gradually wear off. Spanking and scolding a dog after he returns from his jaunt won't help. He doesn't know what the punishment is for.

Our year-old dog, part Collie and part German Shepherd, has a terrible habit of growling and going for strangers as if he's going to eat them up. He has bitten the milkman. Is there any chance of correcting this?—Miss E. J., Maine.

The trick in correcting any bad habit is to do it dramatically, right in the midst of the wrongdoing. Have a pan of water handy. When your dog puts on his demonstration, let him have the water full in the face—and shout a loud "No!" The word becomes a symbol of forbiddance for all crimes. Half a dozen such lessons should suffice.

We will soon leave on a long motor trip, from Philadelphia to Seattle. Shall we take our dog along, or is it too much of a worry? How does one feed a dog on such a long trip? And what about overnight stops—where can he stay?—Mrs. A. F. J., Pennsylvania.

Take the dog along. He'll get as much fun out of the trip as any member of the family. It's easy to feed a dog on a motor trip these days, too. Canned dog food, packaged dry dog food and cartonmilk bought along the way makes mealtime a simple chore. One of the leading dog-food companies offers a hotel and motor court guide listing places that welcome dogs.

My year-old Cocker Spaniel never seems to pay any attention to me any more although I give him lots of attention, feed him well and play with him. What can I do?—Miss A. L., Texas.

Frankly, I think you are playing up to your dog too much. It's a dog's nature to want to do most of the adoring. Lots of dogs, notably Cockers, don't care for all of this solicitous attention, become bored with it, and sometimes show their resentment by growing conceited. In some cases, they turn into domineering bullies. I'd adopt a strict, exacting attitude. Spend some time in training your pet in simple obedience commands.

My dog has dermatitis, but nothing seems to relieve the persistent itching and scratching that it causes. What really is dermatitis? Can it be cured? I feed her shredded wheat, oatmeal, milk, and table scraps.—A. M. H., West Virginia.

Dermatitis takes in a lot of ground. Almost any skin disturbance, from a simple itch to a violent case of eczema, is dermatitis. Give your dog more proteins (meat) and less carbohydrates (starches, sugar), and underfeed him for a while. Do not bathe your dog at all—just brush and comb him. Give him all the air and exercise you can.

Discipline without dithers

time for friendship amongst themselves. Teachers learn that children sense friendliness in a classroom. It's true at home, too.

Draw your youngsters out

Let them share in the family talk. Listen to what they say, and answer patiently. Teachers who monopolize the recital become disliked. It certainly doesn't help the popularity of a parent either.

Don't lie to your children

It's better to give a sensible reason why they may not have more candy than to tell them it's all gone. A good teacher depends on frank understanding. Parents should, too.

Don't be sarcastic

For every bright, brash child who is stimulated by sarcasm, there are 20 who cringe inwardly and acquire an inferiority complex. At home, the child who is ruled by sarcasm becomes rude and forward or else loses self-confidence.

Don't raise your voice

A hard rule at home; even more difficult in a class of 40 youngsters! However, a well-modulated voice in itself commands attention, and is moreover a good nerve-tonic for both the adult and the children involved, because it lessens the tension. A teacher who constantly shouted would go home each day a nervous wreck. And, what's worse, she'd lose the respect of her pupils and her fellow teachers as well.

Set up family rules and standards of behavior

It is a good rule of life to remember that the world judges us largely by our own standards. If we make sensible, efficient rules for happy family life, children live up pretty well to what is expected of them.

If you seriously try to follow a good teacher's indirect means of controlling children, you will discover it's not difficult. It's well to remember that each child is a separate individual with rights of his own. Respect them, and he'll react to your rulings with a feeling of justice, not resentment.

The cloak of vanity

One beautiful but cold day, I was to wear a new, gay, plaid dress to school. I felt that such a lovely dress should never be covered with a coat even on a cold day. So away I went without a wrap.

On our way home a group of girls stopped to chat and someone asked me if I were cold. Before I had a chance to answer, an older girl, whom I admired very much, quickly remarked, "Pride will keep Laura warm."—Mrs. Laura E. Blodgett, Minneapolis.

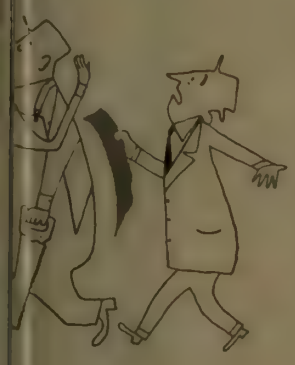
Slow heating, slow cooling



Criticism: Because of the bulk of a concrete floor and the great amount to be heated, a floor panel is slow to heat up and to cool off. Sudden sunshine may leave you and your house overheated. And you can't get rid of radiant rays by opening a window. Most thermostats change as air temperature changes, but maintaining constant temperature isn't enough in a panel system.

Comment: A number of owners of homes heated by panels have the same criticism, though the degree of heat lag seems to depend on the type of construction. With heavy panel systems—that is, large pipes in the floor—it takes some time to heat up the system. When the floor is hot, the floor material and rugs contain so much heat that rooms become too warm before the system cools down.

Complaints about heat lag in ceiling coils are few, since the entire system is lighter and the amount of material to be heated is less.

One solution that most owners find quite satisfactory is the use of dual thermostats, one outdoors and one inside. As the outside temperature falls, the outside thermostat calls for heat, before rooms begin to cool. In this way, the room begins to warm at the same time that it would normally cool, and temperatures do not vary.

Inadequate design

Criticism: Not enough engineers and architects know how to design an adequate panel-heating system, adapted to the climatic conditions where you live, and even fewer contractors know how to install and test a panel-heating system.

Comment: True, panel heating is as good or as bad as its design and installation. Many of the people who design and install radiant panels don't understand their do's and don'ts. You wouldn't go to an automobile mechanic to get your teeth fixed; yet many people will accept anyone's counsel on radiant heat.

Some manufacturers have overemphasized the advantages of panel heating. It isn't a cure-all, but it does have advantages over conventional heating, just as it has disadvantages. Yet nearly everyone who has lived with panel heating is enthusiastic about it.

APRIL GARDEN GUIDE

In all sections:

- Move house plants to a shady spot outdoors when frost danger is past
- Repair garden walks
- Prune spring-flowering shrubs after bloom
- Kill weeds while they are tender
- Apply wood ashes saved during winter and cultivate into soil
- Pinch off peony side buds for larger bloom

SOUTH

Prune spring-flowering shrubs after they are done blooming. Don't use hedge shears, and prune to plant's natural shape, not a ball or pyramid.

Plant summer-flowering bulbs like amaryllis, caladiums, cannas, daylilies, gladioli, tuberoses, and zephyranthes. Feed azaleas and camellias liberally when in full bloom; a second big feeding comes six weeks later.

Feed lawns if you haven't done so, 50 pounds of complete plant food for each 1,000 square feet. Apply 2,4-D to lawns and seed bare spots, but don't do both at the same time. Plant bluegrass mixtures in Upper South; in the Lower South use hulled Bermuda grass, with centipede grass or Zoysia matrella for shady lawns.

Feed roses, 5 pounds of complete plant food for each 100 square feet of bed. Dust or spray weekly. Prune hardy climbers like Paul's Scarlet when they are done blooming. Finish planting dormant roses in the Upper South.

—W. Elbridge Freeborn

TEXAS-SOUTHWEST

Divide and reset gingerlilies, crinum, trailing lantana, and Michaelmas daisies. Plant tigridias, montbretias, amaryllis, ismene, and all other summer-flowering bulbs.

Feed azaleas, and give peonies a feeding of bonemeal immediately after they bloom. Give roses an all-purpose plant food after their first heavy bloom.

Plant rudbeckia, liatris, monarda, hardy salvias, sunflowers, and yucca. Set out potted plants of plumbago, shrimp plant, and poinsettias; use cuttings of poinsettia tops to start plants for next Christmas.

Put cannas and caladiums into open beds the middle of the month; remember that caladiums need some shade and a liberal amount of water.

Set plants of tomatoes, eggplants, and peppers into the vegetable garden outdoors. Be sure to use cutworm guards, or put a ring of poison bait around each plant.

—Marian Price Scruggs

CENTRAL-EAST

Uncover roses and spray stems and surrounding soil agains black spot before leaves are out. Prune hybrid teas to 3 or strong canes and cut those canes back to 8 inches. On hybri perpetuals remove only deadwood and canes less than penci size; tie rambler roses to their supports and take out onl winterkilled wood.

Set out strawberries, rhubarb, currant, raspberry, an gooseberry as soon as ground is dry enough. Trim established raspberries when danger of freeze-killing is past.

Set out plants of cabbage, broccoli, cauliflower, head let tuce, and kohlrabi. Sow seeds of peas, lettuce, radish, spinach mustard, kale, chard, and parsley.

Trim late-flowering shrubs such as althea, low forms o spirea and hydrangea. Rejuvenate overgrown shrubs by cut ting all growth to within 2 inches of the ground.

Start seeds of hardy annuals like petunia, snapdragon an larkspur in the coldframe. Set out small pansy plants, as wel as perennials, cut tops off old perennials.

—Harvey Bicknel

PACIFIC NORTHWEST

Feed lawn with a plant food heavy in nitrogen. Kill weed with 2,4-D and be sure to pick a warm, windless day so tha drifting spray won't kill other plants.

Plant all shrubs and trees, including roses, as early in th month as possible unless a late spring has kept ground col and wet. Mulch the ground around the plants to protect root from drying winds.

Move magnolias as soon as growth has definitely started Feed tulips, narcissi, and other spring bulbs early in th month with a balanced plant food.

Spray or dust roses when first leaves unfold and repeat a 10-day intervals. Give each bush a cupful of balanced plan food, sprinkle it around the bush, rake lightly, and then wate into ground.

—Ada V. Turne

CALIFORNIA

Plant gladioli, yellow callas, tuberoses, montbretias, an tigridias unless weather is bad. For shady spots use fuchsias impatiens, lobelias, and tuberous begonias; transplant them from pots if you want immediate bloom.

Sow almost all vegetables: feed and water them liberall because slow growth makes them hard and bitter.

Treat soil with DD fumigant if you find knots and bunche on plant roots; nematodes are the cause.

Mulch your roses, feed them with high-test plant food, an spray to control insects and disease.

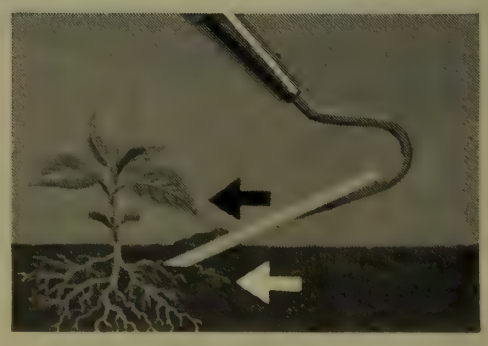
The how of hoeing

Q What is the correct way to sharpen a hoe? My neighborhood is just about evenly split in an argument over whether the front or the back of the blade should be filed. Which is right? L.C.E., Tennessee.



Photographs: Stanley

The front of the blade should be sharpened; to understand why consider the way a hoe is used. Its blade should slide along just under the soil surface in order to nip off weeds below ground. Hoeing too deep damages roots of garden plants

A hoe must be kept sharp in order to do its work properly and with the least effort on your part. You can't get proper results unless the forward edge of the blade is sharpened, as shown. Diagrams below tell reason why

Here in cross-section is a properly sharpened hoe in action. The filed edge slides through the ground parallel to the surface while the sharp forward edge cuts easily through the soil and slices weeds off cleanly and neatly

And here's what happens when the back of the blade is filed. The angle now tends to pull the hoe deeper into the ground. Worse yet, the leading edge is blunt so that it pushes soil ahead of it instead of cutting through. Weeds are pulled by brute force instead of cut off with only slight effort

Starting begonias indoors

I'm planning to try tuberous begonias this year for the first time. Should I start them early indoors?—W. J. G., New Hampshire.

Photographs: Stanley

Tuberous begonias should be sprouted indoors in moist peat in a warm place, but wait until April. A slightly depressed saucerlike area identifies the top side of your tuber. When white growths push out, you can remove the tubers from the peat and pot in rich soil. Don't delay this operation too long or you will break off many roots.

Tuberous begonias are very sensitive to frost, so must not be moved to your garden until all danger of frost has passed. The March Better Homes & Gardens on pages 246-247 gave complete directions for handling them.

Rose-Acacia Monument. This with its poplar-like form is the belle of its family. The many pea-blossom flowers are pink with a rosy cast. Just the thing to plant where you want a pillar of pink in May, but have little space, and a soil that's not too rich.

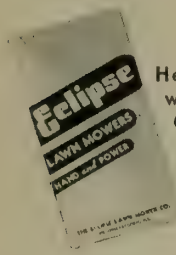
Tamarix. These blue-gray-green shrubs burst into lovely clouds of small pink flowers in summer even though grown where there's a lot of wind. They also tolerate salt air and a sandy, or otherwise poor soil. Excellent for cutting. To keep them small, cut tamarix back to 12 inches in spring. You'll still get clouds of pink bloom.

Beautybush (Kolkwitzia). For a 6- to 8-foot flowering screen, plant a row of these shapely hardy shrubs. Or give one a corner where its amazing production of small flesh-pink flowers can be enjoyed each spring. Although usually slower than the others on this list to start blooming, beautybush is long-lived and a refined-looking shrub at all seasons.

Anthony Waterer Spirea. Quite the opposite, this low-growing shrub can be pruned back severely in spring, yet by early summer will throw up rounded rosy-red heads by the dozen. Useful for foreground planting, edgings, and low hedges, the only times it does not look well are when it's placed near vivid orange and strong pumpkin yellows.

Viburnum carlesi—called Pink Snowball by some, Korean Spice-bush by others—is undoubtedly one of the loveliest spring-flowering shrubs. Each faintly pink ball smells delicious. A few can scent the air for you for yards around. Plant a Viburnum carlesi near your door or porch, to get fullest enjoyment of the perfume. The slightly stiff plants grow well in light shade. Though a natural for planting next to a rose garden, sulfur used for combating black spot on rose foliage is harmful to this viburnum and must not be allowed to drift onto its foliage.

Yellow-flowered shrubs



Double-flowered Kerria makes a blaze of gold for the front of any sunny border. Brilliant yellow balls dangle thickly all over the bushes that, because of their green-barked twigs, remain bright and attractive all winter. They will reach 5 feet in height. Kerria flowers are also good for cutting.

Father Hugo's Rose—best known by its botanical name Rosa hugonis, makes an open bush with wide-flung branches. These through the early part of tulip time are thickly set with flat golden roses. A handsome plant for spring display if you've room for it. Very good dis-

White-flowered shrubs

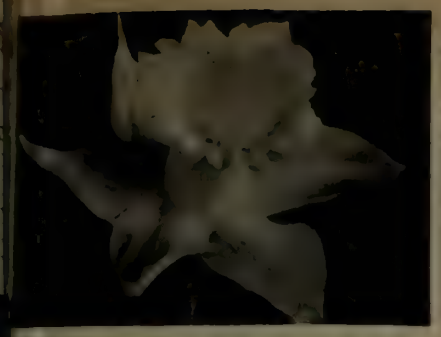
Japanese Snowball (Viburnum tomentosum plicatum glandiflorum) is dwarfer, even more fully hung with petal balls than the old-fashioned snowball, but has none of the troubles of leaves curled with aphids experienced by the old favorite. Hardy and extremely showy, the Japanese Snowball blooms at the same time the red candlestick lilies, the tall bearded irises, and Oriental poppies do. Perhaps best in the border, but makes a beautiful shrub for the house corner, too.

Hydrangea Snowhill. The best of the hardy hydrangeas, this one produces its fine large white heads freely even in considerable shade. Just the thing to give life in August to a foundation planting of hemlocks and yews on a north front. Very easy to keep in bounds. Can be cut back to 6 inches in spring and you'll still get a good display of snowball heads, each all you can cover with both hands. Does best where the soil is not too dry.

White Fringe Tree does not equal the Vanhoutte Spirea in all-round performance. It noses the spirea out of this final place only because the spirea has been planted too often in the hundred-odd years since its introduction to home gardeners. White Fringe Tree is odd, lovely, and spectacular. It looks just as you expect—like a small tree (or tall shrub) hung with silky white fringe. The leaves are large, and you need space to display this pretty little tree which blooms so beautifully as spring ends. It is best moved in small sizes. Ask your nurseryman to be certain that you get a tree with all its rambling roots kept carefully intact.

Give your shrubs this good start:

▶ Plant at once, as soon as received. If this is impossible, cover the roots with fine soil, and keep in the shade.



▶ Dig roomy holes, so you can stretch the roots out like spokes. If planting near the house, center each hole no closer to the foundation than 30 inches.

▶ Set each shrub at its former level. You can determine this by the stain of the soil on the bark. If possible, replant with the same side toward the south.

▶ Cover the roots with good topsoil, and water generously to carry the soil in about them and so avoid air pockets.

▶ Stay on the job until you know each shrub has settled in the position you want.

▶ Mix a pint of balanced plant food into the topsoil. Finish off with a saucerlike depression about each shrub, to catch and hold water.

Diary of a

Plain dirt gardener

Uncovered roses, pruned shrubs, started on spring spading—and then sawed up tops of maple trees the power company men had pruned out. I was ready for the hospital by then

By Harry R. O'Brien

April 1 No foolin', I surely put in a busy afternoon. My routine affairs having arranged themselves, I took part of the afternoon off and went for a visit to the marts of trade—garden trade, that is. And the results of my wandering will disclose what is on the mind of this old-fogey gardener.

First, stopped at a nearby nursery and, amid discussion, learned that the nursery had for sale a special kind of plant food designed both to feed plants and make the soil acid. It is prepared for azaleas, magnolias, rhododendrons, and the like. Well, my few azaleas haven't been flourishing. So I up and bought a 10-pound bag of this special plant food to see what it would do.

(Later note—I used this and there was soon a decided improvement in said azaleas. I find that several local nurseries and seed stores now carry some brand of this type of material. It is a lot easier than the older methods of trying to feed and keep soil acid at the same time.)

To a seed store downtown, where I picked up some additional vegetable seeds not obtained earlier. Bought some grass seed, for I see a few spots on our lawn need refurbushing. Here I bought the highest priced seed, which is the cheapest in the long run—in terms of bluegrass content.

Here also bought a few flats—handy for seed sowing and for carrying things around. Also year's supply of onion sets. Visited more nurseries. Noted where good roses were on sale, just in case I'll need a few more to stop up holes I may find in my beds. Also located good supply of strawberry plants, for the new bed to be made.

Maybe most important, bought a new electric hotbed equipment—wire cable and thermostat, for my old one has played out. Already we're sadly late in getting a hotbed going—and I just have to grow a lot of vegetables this year, too.

April 3 Here it was a warm sunny Saturday afternoon. Gro fit to work and a thousand th to do. And the boys picked this to tear Donald's old jalopy a So there I had to work all by self.

I sunk the wire of the new bed equipment under 4 to 5 in of soil in the frame and then h swoggled David to rig it up, wi wire connecting the thermosta an outlet at the nearby garage. stuck a dairy thermometer in soil too. He plugged in and wires began to heat. We put or sash, to let the soil get warme a bit first.

Also uncovered the rest of roses, which I like to get done fore new growth starts. Did a needed shrub pruning. Starte on spring spading—Brother, th hard work. Began sawing up of maple trees pruned out power company men. By time was done, it was night. And I ready for the hospital.

April 4 Just as always, Ma has been snipping off the narcissus buds. These are ope into bloom in a vase on the din room table this bright Sunda note, too, that there is a vas twigs in bloom in the living ro with yellow forsythia, red flo ing quince, and some other th not yet open. Mebbe apple tw

April 5 Now the sad truth is today's work should have been d three weeks ago. But in this sorr ful old world, one doesn't alw get things done the way the bo say to do it. They get done wh is possible to do them. Wh mean is that at last I got the e tric hotbed going.

After unplugging the curren raked over the surface of the With flat side of spade, fir down the surface. Then I ag loosened the top inch or so wit rake.

MONTAMOWER
Mows and Trims LAWNS
IN ONE EASY OPERATION

"I wouldn't trade my MontaMower for a dozen ordinary lawn mowers!"

The above statement is a direct quotation from one of thousands of unsolicited testimonial letters received from MontaMower owners every year.

And little wonder MontaMower owners are so enthusiastic! MontaMower represents the first basic advancement in lawn mowing devices during the past half century. It is a new and different kind of lawn mower that mows and trims in one easy operation.

Actually, the MontaMower is a live, 8¼ lb. precision machine that smoothly and quietly cuts a full 16" swath through grass, dandelions, spike grass and tall lawn weeds (including the ones that ordinarily pop back-up to cause you extra work).

AND WHAT'S MORE — MontaMower does what no conventional mower can do! It cuts right up to walls, fences, trees and posts — practically eliminates hand trimming. It cuts under foliage, around flower gardens and close-quarter borders which cannot be mowed successfully with conventional hand or power mowers.

The MontaMower is so light, so sturdy and responsive, that even women and children can operate it easily and efficiently. Owners tell us that with their new MontaMowers they cut their lawns in half the time — with less than half the effort.

Learn these facts about the MontaMower from actual experience . . . it's sold under a liberal "Written Guarantee" which permits you to try it on your own lawn . . . makes you the sole judge of its merits. Get the complete facts about the moderately priced MontaMower, AT ONCE! Just fill out the coupon below and mail it today.

Never think that the rules for putting in a good foundation planting are rigid

How to plant your house front is here answered in four good ways, the work of the Pennsylvania landscape group of the American Association of Nurserymen. Plantings pictured are for a Wayne, Pennsylvania, home. Wallace and Warner, designers and builders.

1. Catawba rhododendron
2. Laurel
3. Brown yew
4. Spreading yew
5. Inkberry
6. Azalea Yodogawa
7. Japanese spurge as groundcover

1. A really beautiful house-front planting, this one l the permanence and year-round beauty of evergre foliage plus the added attraction of flowers. It also sco high on these five important points:

▸ The whole planting strengthens the horizontal li of the house.

▸ The central groups emphasize the importance of entrance without blocking it. Nor will these plants gr so rapidly that frequent pruning will be needed to ke the good outlines.

▸ The corners of the house are softened by the shru here and also extended in effect, as they should

▸ Because the house front is not symmetrical, the pla ing at the left is heavier in effect than the looser grou

This plan emphasizes flowering shrubs —

...you plant

to the right of the doorway. This gives a pleasant feel of balance without exact repetition.

▶ The house is definitely handsomer with this planting before it. There's a straightforward exposure of part of the house wall clear to the ground line. The shrubs do not form a solid wreath—never good planting design.

If you want to use a similar planting in an area where rhododendrons and laurels do not thrive because of soil alkalinity, substitute dwarf winged euonymus or hybrid lilacs at the corners, and flowering quinces for the laurel. These are not evergreen, as the rhododendrons are, but do have a long season in leaf. A good alternate for the inkberry is Mentor barberry.

1. Pink dogwood
2. Anthony Waterer spirea
3. Abelia
4. Siebold euonymus
5. Slender deutzia
6. Spreading cotoneaster

2. Made up entirely of shrubs that flower and containing no evergreens, this second planting does the same things as the one above toward improving the house front.

Cluster-type dogwoods are recommended. If these are not winter-hardy in your area, plant the showy Hopa crabapple instead. Somerset daphne can be used in place of abelias. Japanese snowballs or Zabel bush honeysuckle are excellent alternates for the Siebold euonymus pictured at right. The hardier box barberry could well replace the spreading cotoneasters next the entrance step.

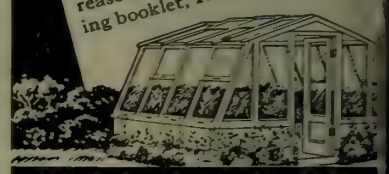
1. Hemlock
2. Spreading yews
3. Mugho pine
4. Firethorn
5. Dwarf yew

An all-green planting requires little after care

3. This is an all-evergreen planting across the same house front, as it will look if you buy large plants at the start, or your planting in its third year if you buy small sizes in the beginning.

This planting will require very little attention. The hemlocks will be denser if the new growth is sheared back to one-third each year. The ends of the yews should also be clipped. And most mugho pines will retain their cushion shapes better if each summer you cut the candles of new pine growth back one half before the needles spread.

Firethorn, Pyracantha lalandi, in this position is unbeatable, where it's winter-hardy. In climates too rigorous for firethorn, a second hemlock can fill its spot. Or—you'll find a good hybrid lilac an admirable replacement. Good pink lilacs like Lucie Baltet, Belle de Nancy, and the very new Esther Staley, or a rose-red variety like Charles X are recommended.



For this or any other planting, the soil should be thoroughly pulverized before the first shrub is set. Remove all pieces of concrete, plaster, boards, bricks, and tile. If clay has been used to fill next the house foundation, remove at least 5 inches of this and replace with good topsoil, then fork well to mix. Where enough topsoil is not to be had, loosen your clay with humus of some kind—well-rotted strawy manure, peatmoss, leafmold, cocoa shells, or ground corncobs.

Set plants at former depth, water generously, and make certain each stands as you want it, before you finish the planting.

1. Hemlock
2. Spreading yew
3. Mugho pine
4. Firethorn
5. Dwarf yew
6. Baronet daylily

1. This all-evergreen planting, the same as in plan 3, is done in small-size plants properly spaced to allow for growth. The too-open spaces are filled for the first one or two seasons with inexpensive perennials. These are removed when the yews, pines, and hemlocks begin to need all the room.

Daylily Baronet was planted here. This variety gives a gay effect with its many red and gold flowers, and like all daylilies, has foliage that's smooth and easily handled.

Azaleamum Summer Sunset is another good filler, being round and neat all season and then covering itself entirely with hundreds of delightful flowers in early fall.

Chrysanthemums like Eugene A. Wander, Maroon 'n' Gold, and Charles Nye are other good choices. Or plant the rich maroon-red and gold iris, City of Lincoln.

Frankly designed for tight budgets, this planting plan does give you a well-furnished look right from the start. There's no waste because the perennials can be lifted and set elsewhere when no longer needed here.

And your first cost for small sizes of hemlocks, yews, and pines of equal quality may be as much as 25 percent less than the charge for the "landscape sizes" used in plan 3. If you do choose this plan, time works for you.

BETTER HOMES & GARDENS

SPEEDY SPADING FORK: You'll find it better than a spade because it enters the soil more easily and breaks up the lumps as you turn them. Head is forged from one solid bar of steel.

SPEEDY GARDEN SHOVEL: The sturdy small shovel you've always wanted for digging, setting out and transplanting plants and shrubs. Sharp 7¾ x 10 inch blade.

SPEEDY "EARLESS" HOE: Improves on old style hoes. No "ears" to strike foliage, works closer, is sharp on 3 sides and meets soil at better angle for fast surface cultivation.

SPEEDY "SOIL KNIFE" HOE: Best for close cultivation or crowded plots. All points and edges of blade are sharp and useful; long shank reaches around plants. Plows furrows, too.

SPEEDY ADJUSTABLE LAWN BROOM: The envy of your neighbors because it is instantly adjustable in width and stiffness for different work (11½ to 20 inches spread). Flat spring steel teeth positively self-cleaning.

SPEEDY CULTIVATOR: Fastest, easiest tool for deep cultivation. Just pull it and the sharp claws dig in, aerate soil, kill weeds, work in fertilizer or humus. Gets under lowest plants. Choice of 4 or 3 tines.

SPEEDY GARDEN RAKE: Light yet strong — a one-piece forging without welds or rivets for raking, pounding and fining the soil and leveling surface for planting.

SPEEDY 2-PRONG HOE: Heavy and strong for working hard, gummy or stony soil and digging big weeds, but so well balanced you don't feel its weight. Use prongs for cultivating.

SPEEDLINE also offers other special hoes, weeder, turf edger, crabgrass rake and floral shovel — 17 tools in all.

SPEEDLINE GARDEN TOOLS

designed specially for you

Gardening goes twice as fast, and is lots more fun, when you use SPEEDLINE tools. Specially designed for the home gardener, each has been streamlined to make it light, fast, easy for you to work with. They are forged from one solid piece of steel, practically unbreakable. All are finished alike with weather-resisting blue handles and gold trim.

Look for the tools with blue handles at hardware and department stores. Start with the tools you most need. You can always add later to your matched set.

kneeling on the ground, I sowed cabbage seed first, and then tomatoes. I also started to put in broccoli, cauliflower, and other things, but at this point I discovered I had forgotten to buy seed of these.

After I drop a row of seeds, I cover it lightly with my finger tips. When I am through sowing, I firm down the surface with a piece of flat board. Put burlap strips on surface. Water gently by sprinkling on the burlap—just enough to dampen but not wet. Put sash on bed. Plug in current again.

As usual, my tomato seed was certified. Both cabbage and tomato varieties are disease-resistant sorts. I treated each packet with suitable chemical to control damping off diseases in the soil, insuring a better stand. And we've already been eating green onions, and the first rhubarb was on the table the other night for supper.

April 6 Dearie me—what a world. Here I have ample time to work today. All outdoors filled with urgent chores calling me. And last night in the wee hours, it poured down rain. All I have outdoors is puddles, and sodden, soggy soil. Clouds and more rain in prospect.

Which is why I have time to contemplate the pool on our rear lawn. Once upon a time gay waterlilies flourished there on summer days. Then we got Alexander, the duck, who soon picked and pulled at those lilies and so ruined them that I threw them away. For 13 years that pool belonged to that duck. But now, as recorded here last summer, the poor duck has gone to duck heaven.

And there is that pool, water green and slimy. What shall we do? Clean it out, buy more waterlilies and plant them? Take out pool, fill it up and use space for new central entrance to garden? It would be easiest on me just to plant some more waterlilies without any cleaning. David's solution would be to get a new duck. It will take a lot of cogitation and family argument before we settle things.

Before night, though, I got out my pruning shears and short-handled lopping shears and started in to give the roses their spring cutting back. Ground was too wet to step into the beds, so I worked at those I could reach from the path.

Winter has killed back most of the roses clear to the mulch line, so I have to whack clear back to there. I belong to the "whack 'em back" school anyhow. A lot of folks think this is rank heresy and roses should not be cut back. It depends on where you live. Heavy pruning isn't necessary in warmer sections of the country.

April 7 Forgot to mention yesterday that the first narcissus blooms from the new planting last November in front of the house have opened up—and not according to schedule. I note King Alfred, John Evelyn, and the old dependable Sir Watkins.

This afternoon I first washed some gravy spots off the vest of my Sunday suit. Then we packed our bags and set off. I have a hurry-up business trip down to Atlanta to make and Maggie and Donald want to go along. So we hitched up the family chariot and drove rapidly southward.

(Note just no space here to describe a wonderful trip. But we drove right down into spring and oncoming summer. We made a record as, by the hour and mile, we kept meeting new things in bloom —redbud, tulips, dogwood, azaleas. At Atlanta, magnolias and tall bearded iris were out.

There, too, we took time to look up old garden friends, especially Donald Hastings, the seedsman. And, of course, W. Elbridge Freeborn, who writes the monthly "Garden Guide" notes from the South for Better Homes & Gardens.)

April 11 For years we have planned to visit the famed Smoky Mountains of North Carolina and Tennessee. So we drove toward them this morning, and as we drove up those great mountains, we found out the why of their names.

We ran into fog and dense clouds. Most of the way from 3,000 feet up to the summit around 5,000 feet and down to 3,000, the only thing we could see was the white line in the middle of the highway to guide us from going off at the curves, clear down to eternity or something. And bless my soul, as we drove down toward Gatlinburg on the other side, the sun was brightly shining.

Home late tonight and what a sight met us. David, who had stayed home with his studies, had

"Buying a New Lawn Mower? Tell you what you do..."

I been sharpening lawn mowers thirty odd years now. So I guess I know a good mower.

Course you want a good one. No sense having to buy another four, five years from now.

First place, remember that what you want a lawn mower for is to cut grass. Just that.

There's a lot of important things about a lawn mower you can't see. Like the kind of steel in the blades—whether it has good ball bearings and cut gears on both sides—whether you can true it up and be sure it'll stay trued up. Average man has to take things like that pretty much on faith.

Tell you what you do:

Find out where they sell Pennsylvania mowers. There's five of them—Great American, Meteor, Pennsylvania Jr., Penna-Lawn and a power mower—for different kinds of lawns, different kinds of grass and different size pocketbooks. Those Pennsylvania people been making fine lawn mowers for more than 70 years. Some of their mowers been cutting grass for ten, twenty, forty years.

You'll be mighty pleased with a Pennsylvania-made lawn mower.

been overhauling his campus jalopy. So said David, lavatory towels and hallway rugs were coated with dirt and grease. Pussycats were in the house, still unfed, and had been walking over tables in dining room and kitchen.

April 12 In the few days we were gone, jolly spring had crept nearer us, too. Many more kinds of narcissus are out everywhere. Tulips are beginning to bloom downtown, I hear. Lilacs begin to show color. Grass is ready for first mowing. Flowering qince covered with deep scarlet. Only the soil isn't ready for spring, for it has been raining.

April 13 News today is from the basement. The black pussy is down there with her spring assortment of kittens. Last evening Donald went Black pussy has kittens in the basement. Donald fixed a cozy box but used Maggie's curtains by mistake to the basement and arranged a cozy maternity box for pussy. He looked around for what he thought were old rags. Spread them in bottom of box.

This morning Maggie discovered the kittens and also that those "rags" were her kitchen curtains she had taken down yesterday to give them their spring washing today.

With much oratory, Maggie hastily remade Mrs. Pussy's little home and rescued the curtains. Otherwise, all that happened today was that I took the burlap off the emerging seedlings in the electric hotbed.

April 18 Spring here again and work speeded up. For instance, Mrs. Maggie and her son Donald were observed going through peculiar activities on the front lawn. Had you stopped, you would have learned that they were applying 2,4-D weed killer to divers weeds which haunt the lawn. They were using two different kinds of small, handy applicators to put on the chemical. Both are on sale at most any good garden counter, so no need to describe here.

This 2,4-D works best when it is applied to weeds that are growing vigorously and when the temperature is above 60. Today it was that and seemed ideal. My notion, though, was that it is a bit too early.

(Note—I was right. It turned cold shortly and not many of the weeds were killed. In the late spring of 1948, many gardeners around here and through the central section of the country did not get good results from use of 2,4-D. The reason was that the weather remained wet and cool for so long.)

This 2,4-D must be applied carefully on a still day, so that it does not splash or drift onto nearby plants, for it will surely damage and may kill most shrubs, evergreens, and flowers. Even vapors given off as it evaporates may drift onto nearby plants and cause damage. Last summer I saw a garden where chrysanthemums had apparently been damaged badly from vapor blown to them by the wind.

As for me, I took color pics of some of the new narcissus varieties, especially of the pink Mrs. Backhouse, which I had never grown before. Finished pruning the roses. Began spading for a new strawberry bed. And brother, spading is mighty hard for me—at this stage of spring. Can't seem to get the boys interested in spading, as yet. Began cultivating roses with hoe, after I had cleaned off and burned the tops pruned out.

April 21 Donald finally went into action. He got the rest of the strawberry ground ready and a bed for early vegetables. I gathered first mess of asparagus. Then he cultivated asparagus and rhubarb. I gave both an application of plant food and ditto to the vegetable space. Also scattered and worked in some peatmoss in strawberry and vegetable beds, to supply some added humus.

April 22 Sowed vegetable seeds. This is three weeks too late, but first chance, for soil has been too wet until now. Put in spinach, carrots, beets, dwarf peas, radishes, and two rows of onion sets.

Then on to strawberries, which I planted two feet apart in the rows and rows four feet apart. It is necessary to set them at right depth so crown is just at the surface. Also, I prune off tips of roots before setting out. When planted, watered them in with a starter solution—plant food dissolved in water, to give them a quick pick-me-up.

I set out some plants each of Temple and Sparkle, two new disease-resistant varieties and with them, some of Katskill and Fairfax, the standard varieties I've been growing, to get a comparison. For table use, 25 plants should be set out, at least, or better 50. For a family of mebbe four, and some surplus, 100 plants will be adequate. We have plenty of space and Maggie likes to put a lot in our zero box, so I set out 200 plants.

April 25 Oh, what a wonderful summer day—Sunday, too. Bright sun. Temperature up to 85. Fragrant viburnum spreading perfume, along with lilacs. Catbirds and brown thrashers singing their heads off. Just like fairyland outdoors.

April 26 Summertime again—and so hot, dearie me, all I got done before supper was to sit in my work clothes in the living room and rest. Afterward, it was too dark except to hoe a few licks in a rose bed. If only I were a rich man and could afford to hire someone to do the work on warm days.

April 28 Betwixt heavy rains and threatened frost, all I've been getting done is cover up the hotbed, uncover, cover up, plug in current for overnight, just in case.

Maybe I had better relate how Maggie came home yesterday from club meeting, sputtering considerably. On the tea table after the meeting, the refreshment committee had used artificial flowers for a centerpiece—with all outdoors filled with real bloom.

April 30 There's that new tree a landscape man planted on our front lawn last spring. Today I raked off the old straw mulch, cultivated around it, gave it a liberal sprinkling of plant food. Then I replaced the mulch and hauled enough more straw to make a new mulch 4 to 6 inches thick.

While Donald got more ground ready for spring planting of flowers and vegetables, I began to give the roses their spring feeding, scattering mebbe a half-trowel of 4-12-4 plant food around the base of each, several inches out from the canes.

For suppertime tonight, Maggie had some cream cheese on the salad. Just between us, it had a most peculiar flavor. Having lived with her for many years now, I said nothing. But finally Donald asked about it.

"I cut up some chives and mixed them in," said Mrs. Maggie.

"Why, we don't have any chives," says I.

"Well, they surely looked like chives. They are growing out there near the asparagus," says Maggie.

"Those are no chives," says I. "They are just wild onions—just a common weed." Oh well, botanically they're first cousins to chives.

(Note—Somehow I've forgotten to report how I sowed seeds of annual flowers in the coldframe, to grow plants to set out later. And there in the same frame, as soon as I can, I'll transplant the vegetable plants from the hotbed.)

UPRIGHT
APANESE YEW

A foundation planting is like other improvements around your home—it needs a reasonable amount of care in planning and upkeep. If you keep in mind a few simple but important facts you can easily have an evergreen foundation planting of long usefulness.

Modern houses that blend into the yard grade may need only a few well-chosen trees and shrubs. If you have an old house on an ugly foundation, you may want a planting which serves mostly as a screen.

The important thing for you to remember is that the needs of each house and the personal tastes of the owners are individual problems. Forget about set rules. Let the design be you, your own feeling of what your house needs and what you prefer. And remember that planting is a decoration to benefit the design of the house and seldom hide it.

Each section of the country has its own types of evergreens best suited to its particular locality. If you're planting in the north central states where winters are severe and summers hot and dry, you'll have to give more attention to choosing the right evergreen than you would in other sections.

There are dozens of varieties grown by nurserymen, and any one of them may be just the thing for you. However, the following half dozen kinds are less exacting in their needs and have proved satisfactory over a long period. All foundation evergreens fall into two basic types: The low, spreading trees and the columnar or pyramidal trees. [Turn to next page

Low-growing evergreens

Japanese yew, spreading type. This is without doubt first choice among the low growers. The yew gives rich deep-green color at all seasons, and is the best evergreen where shade is a problem. Yews are heavy feeders and grow rapidly if planted in good soil and well fed. Allow for a minimum of 5 feet in width and 3 feet in height. Severe pruning can keep size small for several years.

Pfitzer juniper runs second in popularity among low growers with its gray-green foliage and irregular spreading branches. Trees can be staked up when small, but growth is normally quite low, and trees will seldom be over 3 feet tall. This juniper is a rapid grower and will get out of bounds unless trimmed regularly. It will tolerate moderate shade and is one of the best in hot, dry locations.

Dwarf mugho pine is a long-time favorite. It grows in full sun or half-shade, and the bright yellowish-green of its foliage makes it always popular. A mugho pine can be grown in a compact mound if closely trimmed, and you can maintain it at a height of 2 feet and width of 3 to 4 feet for a long time.

Pyramidal or columnar trees

Upright Japanese yew is the first choice among the pyramidal evergreens. Its advantages are many: compactness, rich waxy-green color, ease of trimming, and ability to grow in full sun or deep shade. It will grow tall if untrimmed, but pruning can keep it the correct size for foundation planting for many years.

Pyramidal arborvitae have been popular for many years. Their winter color isn't as attractive as the yew, nor will they do well in the shade, but they serve well where low cost is a consideration. They are easily trimmed, however, and their neat columnar growth habit makes them still a good choice for small, formal foundation plantings.

Upright junipers complete your basic foundation planting choice. There are several types of upright juniper which grow well in sunny spots in well-drained soil. Canaert juniper and Dundee juniper are both well known and satisfactory.

Care of foundation evergreens

Selection of the right trees for your foundation is only the first part of the job. Proper planting and care are absolutely necessary if you are to get the most from your plantings. An unkempt evergreen often does your home more harm than good.

Soil preparation comes first. Dig down into your soil around the house foundation and find out what is beneath. If you find hard clay or rubble or plaster and waste, dig out 30 inches or more of the poor soil. Lay in a bank of gravel or cinders 6 to 8 inches deep for drainage and then cover it with 8 inches or more of topsoil.

Plant the tree in a hole at least 18 inches wider than the ball of earth around the roots, set tree so that lower branches are well above ground level. Nurserymen recommend leaving burlap around the earth ball, but cutting the string and laying back the burlap. Water thoroughly, apply plant food, and then after water has settled, fill in with good soil.

Water your evergreens regularly during the first year after planting. Thorough watering every two or three weeks is better than frequent sprinkling. Even established trees need water during drouth or if they are located where they don't get natural rainfall.

Feed your trees to give vigorous growth and good color. Commercial fertilizer applied in early spring and again in late summer will do wonders.

Prune and trim to retain proper shape and size. It's better to trim lightly once or twice a year than to make up for long neglect by pruning severely. Late spring and early summer are the best times, but pruning at other times will do no harm.

Spray the foliage occasionally with a stiff stream of water to wash out insects such as red spider, and to clean off dust and soot to keep your trees bright and healthy. If your trees become infected with disease or bad attacks of insects, call on your local nurseryman for advice. Don't allow fly-by-night spray men to spray your trees.

Prepare for winter by watering trees thoroughly late in the fall; they must have moisture on their roots over winter. Mulching with old hay or leaves is beneficial if you live in a severe climate, but it isn't absolutely necessary if you are using hardy varieties. It's a wise precaution in late fall to tie up spreading branches where there is danger of snow weighing them down and breaking them.

Other needs of healthy trees are circulation of air and avoiding crowding. Nine out of 10 plantings are too crowded because they start with too many trees and the owners neglect pruning. Keep trees 4 feet from house if possible. All evergreens do best in full sun, although some varieties thrive in partial shade and a few in full shade as pointed out earlier.

A final and very important note: above all, don't copy your neighbor's standard planting with tall trees at corners and the doorway and low growers in between. Some houses look better using all low growers, other are improved with tall growers at the corners.

Whatever you do, don't crowd. Leave space for flowers to brighten and add color. Water, cultivate, feed, and prune—and lean back and enjoy it!

Weight closes gate. Pull of ball on chain keeps gate shut without need of a latch. Note pretty picket tops and posts. At rear of Nancy Camp House

Close spacing makes a bull's-eye design. Could be copied in wood salvaged from crates. Central disc applied in relief. Clerk's Office, next to capitol

Brown-painted gate combined with two styles of white fence pickets emphasizes informality. Top board makes gate rain resistant, tight lower half keeps out small animals. Squared timbers form the steps (could be of old railroad ties). Doctor Blair's Brick House

Give plants a drink if ground is at all dry. Watering won't often be necessary, though, since spring soil usually has enough moisture. Use a porous cloth hose, anti-splash guard, or other device to keep mud from spattering on your flowers

Give support to heavier flowers, such as double tulips, whose weight may bend or break stems. Stiff wire is gently staking material since its presence isn't obvious. Stick wire into ground and bend top into a flat loop for the blossom to rest upon

Cut out seed stalks when tulip petals drop off. Such action makes your bulb bed look much tidier and also prevents the plant from wasting strength trying to produce seeds. Don't dig up any bulbs until foliage has turned brown—although you won't have to worry about that step for a long time yet and the kind of education that they get.

To explain that, here is the story of a grammar-school class, and of four of the children attending it.

The school building is a good one. The federal government paid for its erection in this instance, because it is located in an area where new wartime industries swelled the population. It is a single story structure, well lighted and well heated, and more attractive than 90 percent of the school buildings in this country.

The sixth grade has 37 pupils, 7 more than desirable, but is less overcrowded than in many towns. The teacher is paid $1,890 a year, somewhat better than the national average for sixth grade teachers. She has taught school nine years.

In the second seat of the first row sits Robert Lee. He is attentive. He is doing fairly well in civics, reading, and geography. His spelling is poor. His arithmetic is surprisingly good; he has a knack for figures. He is almost 14, two years behind in school. He comes from a rural school, four rooms, each heated by a stove fed with fat lightwood knots. When the weather was bad, he had to stay out, because he lived more than a mile from the school-bus stop. His teacher was paid $75 a month, $750 a year, the highest salary she had ever received for caring for a class of almost 40.

Elaine sits in the first seat of the second row. She will be 12 this month. She has not mastered the use of the school library and its reference books. Her reading and arithmetic are both poor. She may have to drop back a grade. She came from a metropolitan city where there is an iron curtain about the operations of the schools. Its administration will have nothing to do with the National Education Association. Standards are locally set. The school system is the toy of politicians.

Midway in the same row sits Gertrude. She is 12. She found it hard to get along with the other children at first. Gertrude comes from the same city as Elaine. Her parents had a better-than-average income. This year is her first in a public school, because, before she moved, they sent her to a private school, a thousand dollars a year. She likes the public school better, now that she is used to the children. Her report card shows "A" all the way down.

Opposite Gertrude, in the third row, sits James. He is a home-town child. He went to the first grade in the "old building," and then transferred to the temporary wooden structure that went up, complete with potbellied stove in the middle of the room. It burned during the Christmas holidays in 1945. That winter before the school burned was a winter of sniffles for James, a winter of dread of fire for his mother. She was relieved when the school burned down and it was safely over. He has been going to school in the "new building" for four years. James makes average grades. Jimmy's parents like their town. They like it better than the one from which they moved, soon before Jimmy was born—in a New England state which assumed no responsibility for education. There, through a very high local tax rate, the resources of the community could provide fairly good teachers' salaries, well above the average for the state; but money could never be found to replace the school building, which combined the exterior aspect of a prison with the inside climate of a cold-storage room.

Those are some of the schools of America, and some of the children who become your children's associates, children who must manage the world's affairs tomorrow.

Almost half our states cannot provide the money for decent schools. These states have exported illiteracy throughout the country.

More than half our teachers are underpaid. Less capable men and women are likely to become predominant in the school world within another 10 years. The better teachers appreciate the gratitude of the public and its recognition of the high responsibility of their calling; but they are beginning to regard gratitude as counterfeit currency and to ask for payment in cash.

The average per capita income in the United States in 1946 was $1,213. In 14 states it was less than a thousand dollars. In all but one of these 14 states, rejections for educational deficiency under selective service during World War II were more than double the national average.

These young men were illiterate because they had been deprived of an opportunity to learn. In the middle of a war, facing a manpower shortage on the battlefield and in industry, the nation had to stop and teach young men to read and write. Federal aid is designed to equalize educational opportunity in America, end illiteracy, give every child a chance for a decent education.

Federal aid has been attacked on the grounds that it's an invasion of state and local rights to control education.

Put briefly, the Thomas Bill, the same as introduced by Senator Taft and passed by the Senate in 1948, provides that:

The federal government appropriate $300,000,000 a year to be distributed to the states for public elementary- and secondary-school uses. The distribution is determined by the ratio between the average income of the citizens and the number of children attending school. Supervision of the schools remains in the hands of the states, except that the federal government would have to be assured that the money actually went for teachers' salaries and other legitimate purposes.

THE ROOT-PROOF PIPE

This does not differ markedly from the appropriations made by the federal government for old-age and dependent children's assistance, for federal grants to help build roads, and for federal grants to combat such preventable diseases as typhoid, diphtheria, and VD. All these appropriations are made by the Congress to promote the general welfare, on the theory that typhoid germs are unmindful of state boundary lines.

Illiteracy is as exportable from one state to another as disease. Indeed, illiteracy in a democracy is a disease.

To see what it means to you, let us turn to my native Georgia. Approximately 300,000 Georgians have migrated to other parts of the United States in the past 10 years, for the South continues to supply a very high percentage of American manpower.

Georgia has 259 children for every 1,000 of its total population. That compares with 159 children in New Jersey and 170 in New York, and a national average of 207. The per capita income in Georgia in 1946 was $797.

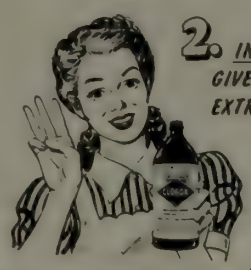
More than half the state's total revenues available for current expenses went for education during my term of office as governor of Georgia.

The minimum needs of the common schools, from state resources, since Georgia provides 58 percent of all school budgets, is about 70 million dollars. This would be approximately 70 cents out of every tax dollar the state collects, and it has not yet been met.

Georgia is typical of the South. Nine of the 12 states supplying the highest percentage of school support are in the South. The money just is not there to provide adequate educational opportunity.

There are 15 other states in which educational opportunity can be best described as uncertain. In these, the state government contributes 16 percent or less—in one state only 1 percent—of the money for schools. In some parts of those states, principally in the larger towns and smaller cities, the schools are among the best in the nation. But in some of the metropolitan areas and throughout the suburban and rural areas, they are among the worst.

Oddly enough, it is from these 15 states that arises most of the insistance that the matter of equalizing educational opportunity be left to state governments. Having rejected any responsibility for the operation of the schools, and having refused to equalize opportunity within their own boundaries, spokesmen for inadequate schools in those states make a vociferous plea for "states rights."



It is necessary to examine some of the forms of opposition to federal aid to America's school children.

First, there are those who present the "states rights" issue. These overlook the fact that there is nothing immutable and sacrosanct about any unit of government, in our American philosophy. Government exists only for its convenience and usefulness to the citizens. The functions of public service that can best be handled at the local level should be handled there; those that can best be performed by the states should be left to them; those that require national treatment belong to the nation as a whole. That the states have lost some of their powers to the federal government is true; they lost them by neglect of their responsibilities. Fifteen states assume almost no responsibility for educating their children. Is "states rights" to mean the right to deprive a child of an education?

Then there are those who are frankly afraid of too much concentration of authority in the federal government. These are to be distinguished from those who use every opportunity to assail the central government for any expansion of public service. For there is some danger in too much concentration of authority in the Congress and the national executive. But the assistance given by the federal government to highways has not resulted in federal control of every city street and every country road; the aid to public health has helped the people of every state, without infringing on local rights; the emergency relief organizations of depression days built many parks, school buildings, libraries, and hospitals, without Washington taking over control from local citizens.

Federal aid to education will not interfere with the parents' right to supervise a child's education. It will not deprive any state or town or county of any essential authority over its local affairs. It will operate, as does the existing federally sponsored lunchroom program, through the normal administrative channels.

Robert Lee has lost two years of his life, two years of earning capacity, while we have been waiting. Elaine probably never will learn to read well enough for it to be a pleasure. Gertrude's parents spent thousands of dollars because the public schools were inadequate. That is what federal aid means. It means they and 16½ million other children need not be condemned to slum schools, waiting for a chance to attend a first-class school. It means decently paid teachers, adequate equipment, and sufficient books. It will raise the literacy level of the entire nation, the only genuine safeguard that a democracy possesses for its self-defense.

It will give your son, and your daughter, and the youngster that delivers your afternoon paper, and the girl next door, a better school.

▶ The opposite view of what federal aid means to you and your children, which also began on page 37, is continued on pages 266, 312, 313. Read the full story before you make up your mind. Editor.

effects. After three years of work, Mold No. 377 produced the golden-colored drug, aureomycin.

Under every laboratory test, aureomycin showed more and more promise. While penicillin chiefly attacks one group of bacteria known as Gram-positives and streptomycin works against another group known as Gram-negatives, aureomycin struck at both groups. Then it went on to attack Rickettsial diseases which no other drug in general use had ever done.

Soon doctors in leading hospitals got samples to test. They found that the drug worked on sick humans as well as in a laboratory.

Last December, after these clinical trials, aureomycin was released to druggists. Now any doctor's prescription can obtain it. And, on February 1, just two months after its release, production improvements permitted a 33⅓ percent decrease in price with further cuts seeming likely as production gets heavier. But, even at the present price, the drug is within reach of everyone.

One doctor has reported that $25 worth (and this was even before the price cut) cured a patient with "virus" pneumonia. And, because of the drug, no hospitalization had been needed, there had been a minimum of doctor's visits and nursing service, and the patient had saved money by returning to work weeks earlier.

The case for aureomycin is still far from closed. Every day come reports of individual doctors trying it out in many diseases. Samples:

A 13-year-old girl with tuberculous draining sinuses of the neck for five years. Ten days of aureomycin and drainage stopped; nodes decreased in size.

People whose chronic urinary tract infections had not been helped by penicillin, streptomycin, or sulfa drugs found their symptoms cleared up with aureomycin.

Five newborn infants with skin and breast abscesses due to staphylococcus germs—one of them with infection and abscesses of the lung as well—promptly improved.

Two patients with brain abscesses treated satisfactorily.

Prompt cure for one patient with meningitis caused by a strep germ and for another with meningitis caused by a pneumococcal germ which had become resistant to other new drugs.

It may be years before the full value of this latest miracle medicine is known. Whether or not it proves ideal for many virus diseases, it has already fired researchers with the belief that a chemical approach to viruses can be practical and encouraged a search for even more powerful cousins to fight these elusive invaders.

But even right now, it is a powerful new weapon in your doctor's hands — immediately available, easily taken, and capable of knocking out many of the worst enemies of the health of your whole family.

RADIANT GLASS HEAT

CLEAN • SAFE • ZONE-CONTROLLED

With this remarkable new Radiant Glass Heating system, you may enjoy comfortable, healthful heat, free from soot, dust or oily film.

You'll be amazed at the substantial saving in the initial installation costs, too. There is no need for a cellar, utility room, storage tank, furnace or piping.

The fingertip thermostatic "zone-control" permits economy of operation and allows you to have heat when and where you want it.

The principle of Radiant Glass Heat is an aluminum element, fused into a smart-looking, durable, tempered glass panel that will operate on A.C. or D.C. current. For your present home with just one or two cold spots, you'll want the auxiliary panel, and for that new home you're planning, you'll want the permanent panels throughout. There are no moving parts—nothing to wear out—no maintenance or repairs. Safe, too, no danger of explosion.

Radiant Glass Heating panels are underwriter approved.

What's That You're Saying, Don Wilson?

Don Wilson of the Jack Benny Program:

"I've found it, friends, I've really found it, the Raisin-Bran that isn't soggy. My taster tells me Skinner's Raisin-Bran is made crisper than any other Raisin Bran. Two well-known, independent laboratories tested 'em all, and found the same answer. So I said to myself, 'Don, old boy, why eat Raisin Bran that's soggy, soggy, soggy when Skinner's Raisin-Bran is crisper, crisper, crisper?' And, friends, I'm asking you the same question. The best answer is to go get some crisper Skinner's Raisin-Bran, and see for yourself."

advisers. Bills are now being prepared to instrument this document. This report proposes such an extensive intrusion of federal agencies into the field of higher education as to result in a domination over every phase of college and university education by the federal government if those in power wish to exercise their authority.

The experts who prepared the report make three assumptions:

(1) That higher education in America is so expensive that few of those able to profit from it can take advantage of it; (2) that it is the role of the federal government to equalize these inequalities; (3) that citizenship in our time demands a level of literacy, knowledge, and insight obtained only through college education.

They also assume that the only way to obtain enough doctors, lawyers, dentists, and other professional people is by using federal money to double and triple our present facilities for professional training.

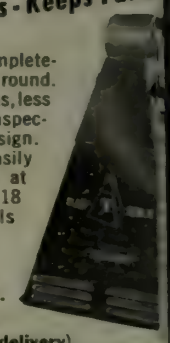
I question these assumptions.

There has been a spectacular expansion in American education since 1900. Only 1 out of 10 of high-school age went to high school in 1900. By 1940, 3 out of 4 went. Only 1 out of 25 of college age went to college in 1900. By 1940, it was 1 out of 6. Now it's better than 1 in 4, due in part to veteran enrollment. The President's commission is not satisfied with this phenomenal rate of increase.

The commission suggests that half our young men and women have the mental ability to profit from at least two years of education beyond high school. It suggests that a third of them have the ability to succeed in college. And it suggests we get them there by 1960. To do this, it says, the federal government must underwrite the program.

I would be the first to agree that there are many young men and women, not in college, who have the capacity to be there. But I violently disagree with the commission when it argues that 49 percent of those between 18 and 21 have the ability to do college work. Most of the serious studies that have been made of this problem by different states, particularly those reported by Maryland, Pennsylvania, and New York, indicate that this assumption just isn't true.

In a careful analysis of the major studies of ability as it relates to educational opportunity, Robert J. Havinghurst has estimated that: "Out of 100 boys and girls of a given age, about 5 are good college material but do not go to college. Some of this group would go to college if given financial help. Others would not."



Havinghurst assumes that approximately the same proportion would go to college from lower income groups if financial considerations were not involved, as now attend from higher income groups. He concludes: "College scholarships for 2 or 3 percent of the high-school graduation group, in addition to the scholarships that now exist, would meet the needs."

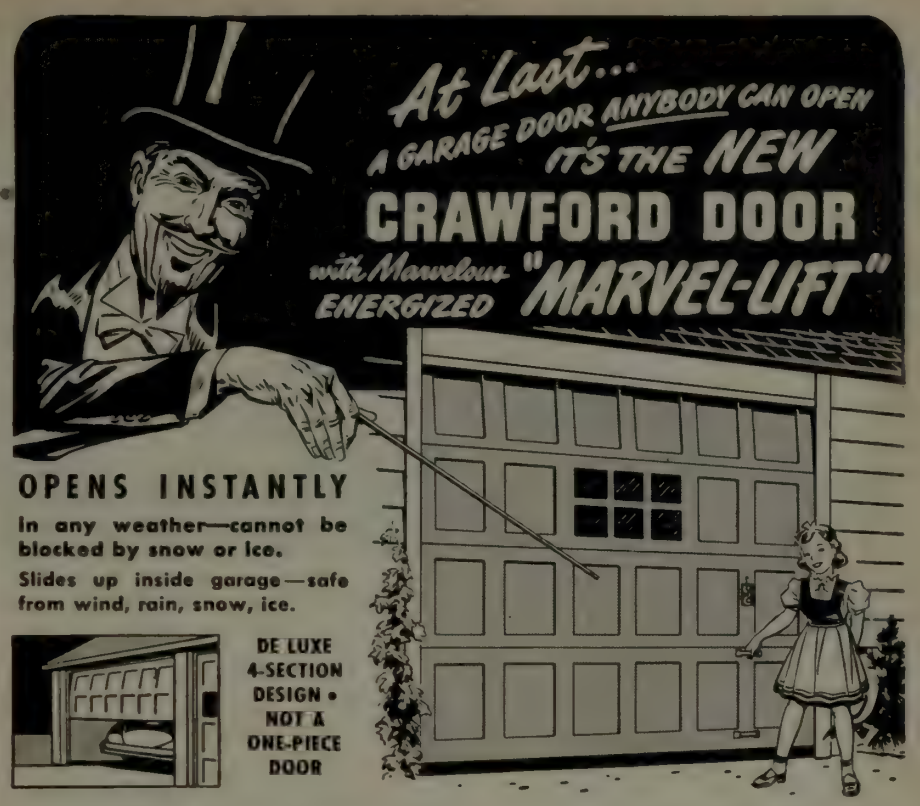
Dr. Harry K. Newburn, president of the University of Oregon, estimates that the commission's 4,600,000 students in colleges and universities by 1960 is at least a million and a half too high when considered in relationship to known socio-economic facts.



One step in the commission's program is the development of a national scholarship system by means of which young men and women would qualify on the basis of ability and need for financial assistance to attend the college of their choice. This is the only part of the commission's report which, if properly safeguarded and administered, does not seriously conflict with our traditional ideas as to the range of the federal government's interest in education.

Some people are deeply concerned with the cost of the commission's proposals. To me this is the least of our problems. In any one year the program, even when it reached full momentum, would not cost as much money as will be spent this year by the air forces, or the army, or the navy. Our young people are more important to us than airplanes, tanks, or submarines. Our real concern should be with the way in which we guarantee a more enlightened citizenry for future generations. Extensive introduction of the federal government into our public and private life cannot occur without a price which in the long run will be greater than we dare to pay. The cost will not be in terms of money, but in terms of freedom. It will not be important in terms of taxes, but it will be significant in terms of human rights. A people for whom the government does everything becomes a people enslaved. A government which guarantees by its own administrative action all human rights ultimately becomes the destroyer of them. A society which can only maintain itself by external controls ceases to be a society in which liberty is different from license and in which moral and social values are more than ethical and political expediences. The surest way to destroy that which our forefathers created is to pass our individual responsibilities on to a paternalistic Uncle Sam.

THE MAN NEXT DOOR

This is the twentieth April in a row when I've vowed to remember to buy a foot scraper shaped like a dachshund for the side door. What's held me back is probably the fear that after I had it I wouldn't like it.

My wife thinks the most vexatious trait in a man is that he can justify anything he wants to do on the loftiest philosophical grounds. If he wants to shift the living-room furniture, he can prove that Plato would have agreed with him.

Lately the teen-agers in our town have taken to removing their shoes when they gather in the living room. A foreign visitor might deduce a religious (maybe a Mohammedan) significance. But I suspect they merely want freedom to wiggle their toes.

What really expands a man's waistline fast is the finicky appetites of his children. . . . Your wife tries to tempt 'em with all sorts of fancy victuals, which tempt you most of all.

I'm an enthusiastic believer in games at grownups' parties. . . . You come nearer solving the Russian problem while tossing cards into a hat, or trying to balance yourself in a big laundry basket slung on a broom suspended between two chairs, than while scratching your head and trying to be brilliant.

"I can put my hand on almost anything I want around the house instantly," brags Les Gowan, trying to hammer a nail with a pair of pliers, "if I go instinctively to the likeliest place where it isn't supposed to be."

⬆ I've been waiting for our first meal in the garden to try out my favorite gift from my wife —a forest green mosquito net that fits over my head. It has a small slit at the mouth, and I'm positive I can eat anything with it that'll go through a straw, completely safe from bees and yellow jackets.

We're mired in the same old vacation argument—whether to return again to beloved Lake Okoboji for the umpteenth time, or to explore the waiting distances. I'm arguing for new vistas this year, and fully resigned to a holiday in the same old cottage.

If so many of my nicest friends didn't like to drink, I'd come out stubbornly for non-alcoholic evenings. And I notice more and more people are offering coffee, soft drinks, and fruit juices on the tray—and more and more smart people are drinking 'em.

"I could chart my husband's moods on a calendar," asserts Phyllis Gowan, waiting in ambush for the garbage man. "If he's grouchy on Mondays and Wednesdays, I can count on him to be cheerful on Tuesdays and Thursdays. Or vice versa, of course."

If you could scrub that thin veneer of imitation movie and radio mannerisms off the typical teen-agers, I think they'd stand revealed as more charming than we were at their age.

Give me one good look at a family's medicine cabinet, another into the refrigerator, and a glimpse of a husband's clothes closet, and I'll tell you more about him and his family than Who's Who plus a secret report on his finances. ➡

We've talked for years about inviting each of the children's teachers to dinner occasionally. I think it must be a wise diffidence that holds us back. We probably fear they'd see in us and our household a clear explanation for every one of the children's foibles.

My neighbor, a professor at our local college, fears that television will soon overwhelm us, and people will quit reading books. I console him with my theory that Jean Arthur reading a good book on a TV program with her legs crossed might actually spur a revival of interest in the classics.

All winter I've been assembling our picnic kit, in tune with our goal of 50 picnics in '49. It's quite complete now, with canvas campstools and a safari cot. It fills two suitcases, and by roofing it over in a clearing we'd almost have a furnished summer cottage.

When your youngest confides it makes him happy, as he goes to the bathroom at midnight, to see a light shining under your door. . . .

Every time your wife tells you how nice you look in her favorite among your suits. . . .

When your husband concedes that you work harder, if in different ways, than his grandmother ever did. . . .

When you're in the middle of a lecture to your son (and secretly feel pretty stuffy about it) and he suddenly says "You're right, Dad." . . .

When for no obvious reason you walk across the room about 9 p.m. and kiss the partner of your joys and sorrows. . . .

Each time the two of you exchange tidbits from what you're reading which hit you both the same way. . . .

Every time your daughter brushes your cheek with hers and seems ecstatically happy about something not altogether mysterious. . . .

Then family life wins another gold medal, and you're silently glad you didn't become a bachelor beachcomber (or a spinster career woman) after all.

—HARLAN MILLER

...E PEOPLE of America have put billions of ...ars of their savings into building their tele-...ne system. They have learned more and ...e ways to use the telephone to advantage, ... have continuously encouraged invention ... initiative to find new paths toward new ...zons.

...hey have made the rendering of telephone ...ice a public trust; at the same time, they ...e given the telephone companies, under ...ulation, the freedom and resources they ...t have to do their job as well as possible.

...n this climate of freedom and responsi-...ty, the Bell System has provided service ...teadily increasing value to more and more ...ple. Our policy, often stated, is to give the ...t possible service at the lowest cost consistent with financial safety and fair treatment of employees. We are organized as we are in order to carry that policy out.

BELL Telephone Laboratories lead the world in improving communication devices and techniques.

Western Electric Company provides the Bell operating companies with telephone equipment of the highest quality at reasonable prices, and can always be counted on in emergencies to deliver the goods whenever and wherever needed.

The operating telephone companies and the parent company work together so that improvements in one place may spread quickly to others. Because all units of the System have the same service goals, great benefits flow to the public.

Similarly, the financial good health of the Bell System over a period of many years has been to the advantage of the public no less than the stockholders and employees.

It is equally essential and in the public interest that telephone rates and earnings now and in the future be adequate to continue to pay good wages, protect the billions of dollars of savings invested in the System, and attract the new capital needed to meet the service opportunities and responsibilities ahead.

There is a tremendous amount of work to be done in the near future and the System's technical and human resources to do it have never been better. Our physical equipment is the best in history, though still heavily loaded, and we have many new and improved facilities to incorporate in the plant. Employees are competent and courteous. The long-standing Bell System policy of making promotions from the ranks assures the continuing vigor of the organization.

WITH these assets, with the traditional spirit of service to get the message through, and with confidence that the American people understand the need for maintaining on a sound financial basis the essential public services performed by the Bell System, we look forward to providing a service better and more valuable in the future than at any time in the past. We pledge our utmost efforts to that end.

rk house? Remodel!

We remodeled a porch, added a bay

By Paul Haman

er There's a difference of 17 years, a lot of light, ween the two pictures above. By combining small windows into larger ones and by remodeling porch, we got extra light inside. Asbestos shingles dressed up exterior

Only three things were wrong with our use in Perryville, Missouri—the room arngement wasn't good, the house was dark inside, and the exterior was out of date. Actually, only feature that kept us where we were was beauty of the site.

Architect Glenn Luetje of nearby Jackson ved all three of our problems, largely by ensing part of the front porch and removing the t. This gave us a hall that takes the traffic d out of the living room, gave us more light the front bedroom, which was moved over to clude part of the old porch, and cleaned up the lines of the house. Adding a carefully scaled bay window in the living room made that room bright throughout the day and created a point of interest on the front exterior.

French doors and decorative bookshelves in the dining room, new closets for the front bedroom, and lighter paint throughout finished the interior renovation. Asbestos shingles painted white, green shutters, and a new green shingle roof built over the old roof dressed up the outside.

As a final touch, we overcame the ugly expanse of foundation wall by building a bank and planting it with low shrubbery.

FOR your NEW HOME...

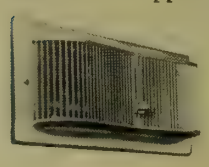
HONEYWELL COMFORT

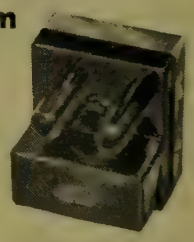
begins with the Blueprint

Whatever your new house may cost, it will not be a real home unless it is comfortably heated. So, decide upon your heating system when your house plans are still in the blueprint stage. And remember, no heating plant can be better than the controls that regulate it. To insure maximum comfort, safety, dependability and economy, insist upon Honeywell automatic control equipment.

Here are some of the Honeywell controls and control systems you can select, depending upon the size and type of home you are building.



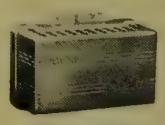
CHRONOTHERM
Electric Clock Thermostat



Every home should have the convenience and economy of automatic clock thermostat regulation. Chronotherm automatically switches to lower fuel saving temperature at bedtime. Then in the morning, before you arise, it restores daytime comfort temperature. Chronotherm will save 10% or more of your fuel and will give you greater heating comfort and convenience.

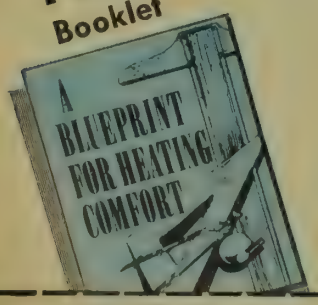
HONEYWELL Diffusion Register

Here at last is a forced air register that combines harmonious appearance with superior performance. It is scientifically designed to spread the warm air into every part of the room. It is so low in cost that no home need use old style, unsightly registers.



ELECTRONIC MODUFLOW
Control System

Electronic Relay



For an entirely new conception of even, continuous heating comfort, you should install the new Honeywell Electronic Moduflow control system. Electronic Moduflow combines the magic speed and sensitivity of electronics with the Moduflow principle of continuous flow of heat. It does away with the drafts and cold floors caused by the ordinary on-and-off heat supply.

Electronic Thermostat

In larger homes, and ranchtype homes, it may be desirable to install an Electronic Moduflow system with two or more thermostats located in different sections of the house. And for that basement recreation room, a separate thermostat will maintain just the temperature you want without affecting the rest of the house. An Electronic Moduflow Control System is surprisingly moderate in cost and will repay you many times in added comfort, convenience and fuel economy.

Minute rice is already-cooked, long-grain, white rice. You add water and salt in measured amounts, heat to boiling, let stand a few minutes. Each grain is fluffy and tender—just as though you had boiled and rinsed and coaxed the rice to perfection. Without any fuss, you can make expert Savory Browned Rice, Spanish Rice, Rice Pudding.

Premeasured baking powder will be on your grocer's shelves in the future. Each teaspoonful of baking powder is sealed into an individual compartment of a sectional cellophane ribbon. The ribbon feeds out through a slot, can be torn off at the marked intervals on a serrated metal edge. In addition to eliminating measuring, the cellophane packaging protects baking powder from deterioration.

Butter patties, each stamped with a star, come aluminum-wrapped in one-pound packages. Just the thing for dress-up dinners when you're getting out your bread and butter plates. Save cutting, stamping, or molding.

Pecan cake is a Texas delicacy, a rich blonde fruitcake full of whole red cherries and perfect nut-meat halves. Now you can buy it in a 1-pound 2-ounce can which serves 10 to 12. Chill it in the can thoroughly, and it will slide out and slice beautifully without crumbling. Top with whipped cream or any dessert sauce if you wish.

New faces for old garden favorites

You'll like the fresh new colors worn by these enduring plants

By Dale Somers

Gardens are like your business. The wise man puts most of his money into standard items, but invests a little each season in exploring the merits of new products.

Do the same thing in your garden and it works out that you always have a good show of healthy plants with some extra excitement from time to time from novelties. If you've taken a big chance on the hardiness of your novelties, then you may wish you'd stuck to the time-tested plants. But you take no chances with the four winter-hardy plants mentioned here.

If you grow the older forms of pussy willow, moss phlox, monarda, and floribunda roses, then you'll succeed with these.

ore from your lawn mower

- by caring for it properly
- by using it right

By Ken Murray

It may be stretching the point to say that there is an art to mowing a lawn. On the other hand, there's more to it than just pushing the mower across the grass. You can't expect to do a good job unless your mower is properly used.

Modern lawn mowers will give good service over a long period of time—if you take good care of them. Lawns studded with stones and twigs will dull and pit the blades. Frequent jarring against walls or trees may throw the mower out of line. And, of course, a mower needs to be oiled, greased, cleaned, and adjusted regularly to do its best work.

Lawns should be mowed when they need it, not at any set time. Close mowing will remove so much of the leaves that the grass plants may starve, while grass too long will thin out in an effort to reach the light. About 1½ inches is considered the ideal height to cut most grass.

As a general rule, don't mow wet grass because it tends to flatten down. Many of the blades aren't cut, and the lawn is uneven when it dries and the grass springs back up. Besides, the weight of mower wheels and feet tend to pack down wet earth and make it difficult for grass to grow.

You'll find other tips on the proper care and use of a mower on this and following pages. They're all suggestions which will help you have a neater, better-looking lawn with less work.

u don't like rattles in your car; why tolerate them in your mower? hten all bolts and screws occasionally during the season or you'll ve a loose, rattling mower old before its time. Wipe cutting edges h an oily rag (right) frequently, especially after mowing damp grass

Uncle Sam

YES

says Senator Allen Ellender, Louisiana, co-author of federal housing bills

At the conclusion of his book, Crusade in Europe, Ge Eisenhower summed up his ideas on what we must do really want democratic institutions and ideals to survi

"The areas in which freedom flourishes will contin shrink," he said, "unless the supporters of democracy m Communist fanaticism with clear and common underst ing that the freedom of men is at stake; meet Commu regimented unity with the voluntary unity of common pose; and, above all, annul Communist appeals to hungry, the poor, the oppressed, with practical measure tiringly prosecuted for the elimination of social and ec mic evils that set men against men."

It is significant that General Eisenhower should p the greatest emphasis on the elimination of social and nomic evils. It has its world-wide application, of co but it also brings us right back home to our own nati problems. One of these problems is housing.

Most of you who read Better Homes & Gardens are sc customed to modern conveniences that you have diffic in visualizing what it would be like to get along without t

About the worst that happens to most of you is tha plumbing goes out of whack for a few hours or the he plant breaks down for a short time. You can always g your neighbors and friends during the emergency. Slee occasionally on cots and the rug in the living and di room and having a lot of visitors around the house for a days are temporary inconveniences most of you don't m

But how many of you have thought what it would be living where not only your own house but also every o house in your crowded city block had no bathroom at How secure would you feel about the health of your fa and yourself if your home was always cold and damp? H would you like to have your children playing in filthy al because there were no yards or parks for them? What w it be like if you had to share your home all the time—u conditions which, to apply General Eisenhower's ph "set men against men"?

Well, today several million of your fellow American live under such conditions. The girl who comes in to your wife with the children may be one of them. And d think that doesn't affect you!

Last year the Joint Congressional Committee on Hou found over five million families struggling to live in the and dilapidation of our city slums. [Turn to page

id in housing

NO

s Rodney Lockwood, Detroit builder, past pres-nt of National Association of Home Builders ow much longer will it be true in America that "A 's home is his castle"?

re we headed for a police state in housing under which rican families will live wherever and under whatever itions some government bureau may dictate? This situ-n, of course, prevails in Russia, but England and France, h still call themselves democracies, have reached vir-y the same state.

ngland started down the path to regimentation in hous-in 1919 with the enactment of the Town Planning Act. s venture into government-owned housing was begun as ll-intentioned effort to improve the housing condition w-income families. But politicians seized upon it as a nt political force. Today in England no private home be built without government permission, and nearly all sing is built and owned by the government.

France, too, government control of housing began at nd of World War I. It has been tightened progressively. s Bertrand de Jouvenel, noted French economist:

If you are in search of a place to live, you cannot find it ny price. There are no vacant lodgings . . . nor can the ers expel anyone. Young couples must live with in-laws, the wife's major activity consists in watching out for ths. Tottering old people out to sun themselves in public dens will be shadowed back to their flat by an eager ng wife who will strike a bargain with the janitor, so as to first warned when the demise occurs. Other apartment-sers have an understanding with funeral parlors. . . ."

t us see what the housing planners have in store for us e in the United States. The chief of the federal housing eaus, Mr. Raymond Foley, has prepared legislative pro-als which provide for (1) a declaration of a national using policy, (2) appropriations for subsidizing govern-nt-owned housing, (3) federal loans and capital grants to al governments for slum clearance projects, (4) financial istance by the Secretary of Agriculture to farmers for con-uction of farm dwellings, and (5) federal sponsorship of g-range housing research.

The "declaration of national housing policy" will no ubt give lip service to individual homeownership. But it ll also lay a basis for government control and ownership of homes of this country. The proposed program of housing earch will result in nothing more than a propaganda bar-e to persuade you that our present [Turn to page 207

How we retired with $200 a month

WE'RE having a wonderful time, Betty and I. We're doing all the things we've dreamed of doing. We're really living. Summers, we pack the car and take trips. And it's all thanks to a check for $200 that comes by mail, regular as clockwork, every month!

The neighbors think we're rich. Few guess the truth. Actually, almost anyone can provide the regular income we have—if he starts young enough.

Luckily for me, I was about forty when Betty began to worry about our future. "You're going to want to slow up in a few years," she'd say. "You won't always want to work." And I'd laugh. Because I felt fine. "I still have twenty good earning years ahead of me," I'd answer.

But one day she stopped me. She asked me how much I'd earn in the next twenty years—not counting raises. I did some quick arithmetic, multiplying my salary by 20. It ran up into six figures! I gave her the answer, and grinned.

Betty wasn't impressed. "How much of that do you think we'll save?" she asked. I had to be honest. We were spenders. "A thousand or two," I admitted.

"That's just our trouble," she said. "We can't seem to save. That's why you ought to get one of those retirement income plans. And now."

I could see that Betty was right. Most of what I'd earn in the next 20 years would go—as it always did—unless I made some systematic plan for our future then and there. So I looked into the subject and discovered the Phoenix Mutual Retirement Income Plan.

It was a way I could make part of my salary now buy me a retirement income later. All I needed was to start in time.

With a Phoenix Mutual Plan, I could get a check for $200 a month for life, starting in 20 years, when I reached 60.

Betty and I were both mighty happy the day I applied and qualified for my Phoenix Mutual Plan. Right away it gave us a feeling of security. But the big day came, twenty years later, when our first Phoenix Mutual monthly check for $200 arrived in the mail. I retired. Now Betty and I are having the time of our lives—with no money worries.

Spotting cord break. If a motor fails and you can't find the trouble, there may be an invisible break in the wire. With the motor turned on, grasp consecutive parts of cord as shown and push together. If motor starts momentarily, you have found a break that needs splicing. Or better still, replace cord.

Handy crutch tip. Doe your screwdriver blister you palm when you drive larg screws? Fit a rubber crutch tip over the handle, and th job will be easier. You ca also use a crutch tip to pro tect the handle of a chisel

Stripping a wire. There is an easy way to strip rubber insulation from an electric wire without damaging the wire itself. Use the claws of a hammer, as pictured, instead of a pocket knife. But don't try to remove too much insulation at one bite. A two-inch section is enough.

Spatter stopper. When you hammer the lid of a paint can for an airtight fit, you may spatter paint all over the room. The ounce of prevention—a cloth placed over lid and can to block the spatter. Before painting, punch a few nail holes in the can groove and paint will drip back into the can.

To space hangers. Do your clothes bunch up on their closet rods? To keep them evenly separated, put rubber-headed tacks into the rod at regular intervals, to space hangers. Clothes stay neat, come out easily.

HAVE YOU HEARD?

the latest in garden news reported by Dr. R. Milton Carleton

ush killer saves chopping

At last there's a muscle-saver that lets you kill weed trees and clear off brushy land without breaking your back over a grubbing hoe and ax. Chemists know it as a combination of 2,4-D and 2,4,5-T (this latter I described in Better Homes & Gardens in February 1945.) Now as a brush killer, you can get it already mixed and ready for use. You apply it just above the base of the trunk or stems. Even the toughest specimens, the ones formerly resistant to straight 2,4-D, succumb to this mixture in a hurry. One exception is Japanese honeysuckle which is killed more quickly with the ester forms of straight 2,4-D. Read the label on your package, to make certain which you're getting when you buy a weed killer.

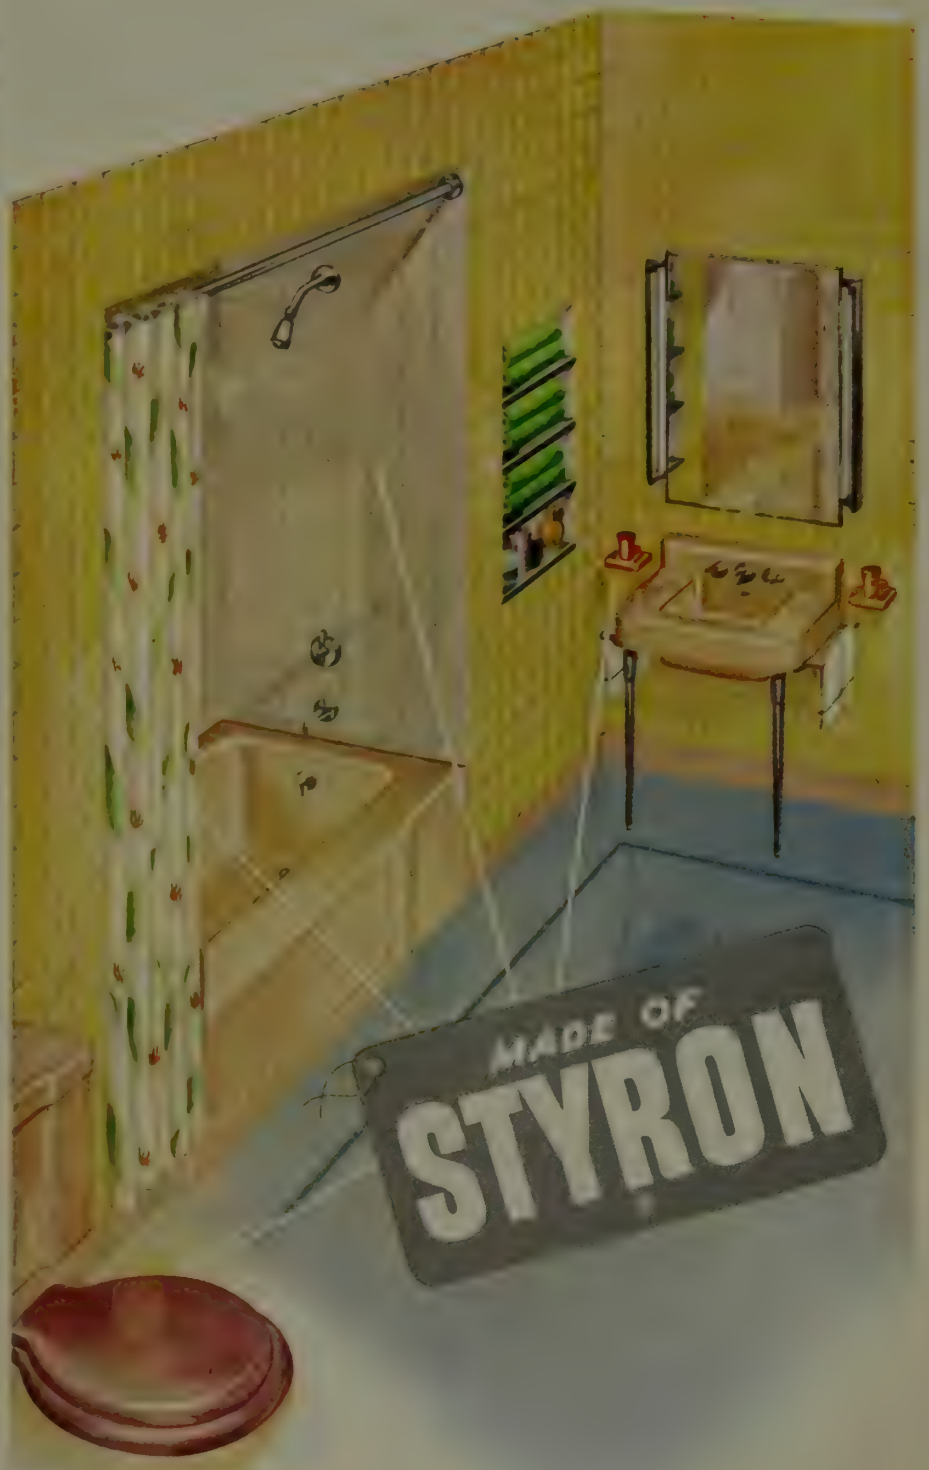
Popular misconceptions of the rate of growth of trees are hard to kill. In a recent bulletin of the famous Morton Arboretum in Illinois, I observed that the silver maple, often planted because it is supposed to be fast-growing, actually made less growth over a 10-year period than did American, Chinese or Moline elms, thornless honeylocusts, sycamores, and little-leaf lindens, all far more desirable trees. The sycamore, planted as a 6-foot specimen, grows fastest of all, nearly 35 feet in 10 years.

lordane deadly to beetles

If the Japanese beetle is your biggest garden problem, you'll be glad to hear that Chlordane, a relatively new insecticide, has proved 600 times as toxic to this pest as arsenate of lead, and 10 times as deadly as DDT. Ten pounds of actual Chlordane to the acre (i.e., 100 pounds of 10 percent dust) has given 98 percent control, about the best record of any material to date.

vender-blue—two new mums



Two outstanding new garden chrysanthemums, extra-hardy and distinct, are Violet and Silver Pink. Both come from Minnesota where they bloom at the end of August. Not over 2 feet tall, they're great for cutting as well as outdoor display.

od cherries do grow on bushes

Also from Minnesota, you can get a good bush cherry. Order Prunus tomentosum No. 57. After several years it may get to be 10 feet tall. But it's good purely as an ornamental. Besides that you get loads of fruit, almost as good as the best of the sour cherries, and three weeks later, so the cherry-pie season is stretched.

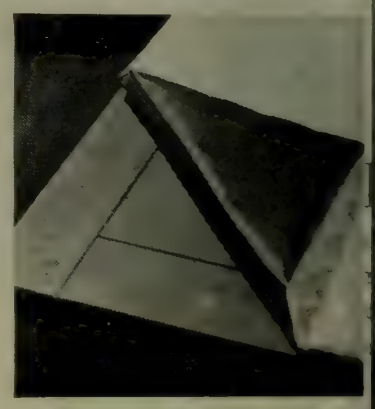
Indoor dryer holds 50 feet of line in a 36-inch square. Arms fold for storage, without dislodging the line. All aluminum, the dryer is 40″ high, perfectly balanced even when loaded. Legs are rubber-tipped to prevent marking the floor, or slipping. Falco Indoor Drier is $4.95, in stores only. Falco Products Co., Dept C, 1838 N. 20th St., Philadelphia 21, Pennsylvania.

Table-top refrigerator fits right into line along with other cabinets in your kitchen, gives you 600 square inches of additional work-table area. Ventilator at the back allows free circulation of air. White enamel unit with cabinet top of linoleum, plastic, maple, or stainless steel, stands 36″ high. Top is 27″ wide, 25″ deep. Glasco Table-top Refrigerator, about $200, at dealers. Glascock Brothers Manufacturing Co., Muncie, Indiana.

Dry mop of colorful cotton yarns picks up and holds dust and dirt. Outer fringe spreads to pick up even paper scraps or grit. As mop is lifted, fringe swings inward, trapping the dirt. A whirling motion cleans the mop head quickly. When head needs laundering, tape with fringe slips off the frame. Vacuum Action Dry Mop is in stores only at about $2.40. Easy Day Manufacturing Co., 164 Broadway, Revere 51, Massachusetts.



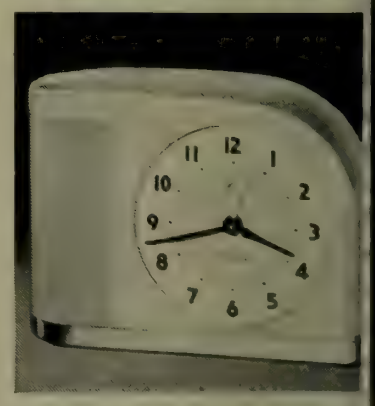


Table protector is made of Fiberglas to give ultimate insurance against heat damage and scorching of fine wood finishes. Plastic coating of the pad is liquid-proof. Soft quilted design deadens the clatter of silver and china. Permapad Table Protector is light to handle, folds to a small package. With white, maroon, or green backing, and white quilting, Permapad is 36″x48″, $12.95; 40″x60″, $18.95; 44″x72″, $24.95. In stores. Place mats, 11″x17″, $1.69 each. Stanley Manufacturing Co., 747 Santa Fe Dr., Denver 4, Colorado.

An alarm clock needn't scare you to death to wake you up (it says here). The Moonbeam tries an easy-on-the-nerves way first, by flashing a light on and off through its translucent case. If you sleep through that, the clock starts jangling in the conventional manner. Moonbeam is a self-starting electric alarm, 8″ long, housed in white plastic with gold metal base. In stores only, $9.95 plus tax. Westclox, La Salle, Illinois.

Bobbins for your yarn are light-as-a-bubble plastic. Yarn is wound between discs, as you wind a sewing machine bobbin. Ridges prevent unwinding yet release yarn readily at a slight pull. There's no chance of snagging your yarn during winding or knitting. Round bobbins minimize yarn tangling, and you can always see your yarn supply through the clear plastic. Set of 10 bobbins, $1, in stores only. Rawly's Toys, 102 Clay St., San Francisco 11, California.

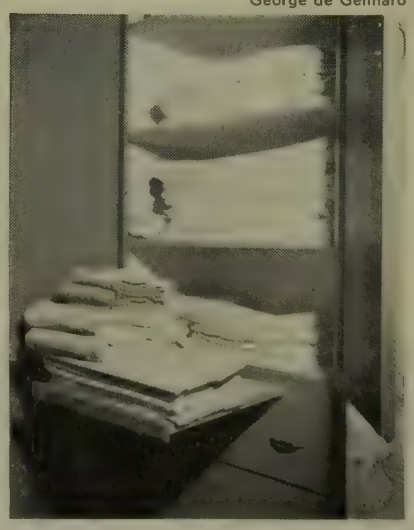
Bathroom storage

Wall-hugging rods and shelves hold extra linen



By Rosemary Gould

Photograph: Philip Fein

Put a bare bathroom wall to work with this combination of towel racks, cosmetic niches, and shallow storage drawers. The grid for the towels was made from wood strips 1⅛ inches square, mortised together. Niches and drawers were set between studs of the wall so they take no bathroom floor space. This sort of shelf-and-rod arrangement only takes a few inches of bathroom space. But the drawers and shelves are as deep as the wall is thick, plus the extra few inches that the towel grid extends from the face of the wall.

George de Gennaro

Get extra duty from a regular bathroom linen closet by adding a pull-out shelf to the line-up of drawers and shelves. A pull-out shelf like this will help you sort the family laundry as you put it away. The shelf is large enough to serve you as a handy bathroom table, too. When you're not using it, the shelf slides back into the closet.

Super new insecticide kills all that DDT will and a lot more too. But you can't buy it yet. Toxicologists aren't yet sure it won't kill you

Deadlier than DDT

By Dr. R. Milton Carleton

It is called parathion (para-Thigh-own). Name any common insect harmful to plants, indoors or out, and the chances are—with few exceptions—that parathion will destroy it, utterly.

American scientists found parathion's formula when they raided the I. G. Farben Corporation files in Germany after the war, under the code No. E 605. Formulated as one of a number of phosphorus combat poisons, it had failed, and wound up in the files as a possible future insecticide.

It has been used by many orchardists and by practically every greenhouse of any size in the United States and Canada for more than a year now, but you haven't heard much about it because the United States Department of Agriculture toxicologists have not yet approved it for vegetable growers or for you to use around home. There's still too little known about what it will do to you.

So potent is this new killer that it is creating problems all its own. In 1948 rose prices on the cut-flower market dropped several times, due to market gluts. These gluts were the direct result of the use of parathion by most big growers, so that many of them were cutting two to three times the number of perfect blooms they had been able to grow before. So much top-notch material reached the market that prices sagged.

I expect something of the same sort will happen in other fields as well. I suspect that apple production for 1949 will increase without much expansion in the number of trees of bearing age. The secret will be parathion, which can wipe out redspider mite, eggs and all, in one or two sprayings.

When released, it ought to be a boon to home fruit growers too, who have never been able to spray often or well enough to save a crop from worms. On apples, three applications of parathion with simple equipment promise complete control.

Unless some unforseen condition shows up it should be the perfect spray or dust for vegetables, since any application is usually dispelled within a week to 10 days, leaving no poisonous residue. I have seen a number of test plots sprayed with amazing success.

The best description I have heard of the power of parathion came from an orchardist: "This stuff is actually as good as the public thinks DDT is."

Just as the average man believes DDT can control any insect at any time, anywhere, parathion comes close to being able to do that. Last summer I saw two pear trees in an area where the pear psylla usually causes severe injury. One had been sprayed with parathion, the other left untreated. The sprayed tree was like a catalog illustration of a perfect pear—clean, healthy, and covered with dark green foliage. The unsprayed check was coated with the black, sticky substance characteristic of pear psylla, obviously in terrible shape.

Even more dramatic was an orchard all but abandoned by the owner the year before when eight sprayings a year failed to make a crop. This time he sprayed half his trees three times with parathion, the other half eight times with DDT. In spite of the eight sprayings, the DDT side was distressing to see—yellowing foliage, stunted fruit on the trees and the smell of decaying windfalls everywhere. The trees sprayed with parathion were so clean it was like coming into another country to walk among them. Here were dark green healthy leaves, and fruit like state fair exhibits. Except for a lonesome mud dauber gathering mud at a pool, I could see no sign of insect life in the parathion-treated side of the orchard.

Unlike DDT, parathion does not kill off bees and other pollinating insects essential to a good fruit crop. The trees are sprayed before the blossoms are open, before the bees have been attracted to them. They [Turn to page 139

Spring colors work magic

By Gerry Stoner

Spring comes in color—green lawns, yellow daffodils, and red tulips. And here are bright, inexpensive cotton slipcovers and draperies to help you work spring's color magic indoors, too. You may not be able to change your furniture this spring, but you can change your color scheme and give your furniture a new look.

To show what you can do with springtime colors, Better Homes & Gardens Furnishings Editor Christine Holbrook planned new slipcovers and draperies for this jaded living room. Vibrant red, crisp green, and sunny chartreuse cotton blend smoothly to make an elegant setting for the old furniture.

Best of all Mrs. Holbrook didn't change a stick of furniture, dye the carpet, or paint the walls or woodwork. Color-bright draperies and slipcovers and new white curtains turned the trick.

As you can see, this isn't fancy, high-falutin' decorating. It's a simple kind of decorating you can use in your own home right now. The formula is simple: Study your walls and rugs and any upholstery you won't want to change. Pick a gay color scheme that blends with them all. Then find a patterned material in your colors, and several solid-colored fabrics that pick up the colors in the pattern. Make draperies and slipcovers—and your living room will be like new again.

For flowers to brag about—grow IRIS

By Sam Y. Caldwell

When June starts "busting out all over," you can count on irises to give you a real bang. You'll get color—great masses of it—from these long-time favorite perennials. Now, thanks to the plant breeders, irises are available in more and different hues than ever before.

Look behind the whiskers of a tall bearded iris and you'll find it's just a glorified flag from grandmother's garden. But something new has been added—larger flowers of exquisitely sculptured form without the old-time floppiness . . . clarity of color, plus some entirely new shades . . . and stronger, well-branched, better-proportioned stalks.

Which ones? More than 25,000 irises have been named. Current catalogs list three to five hundred varieties. Are you lingering over the pretty color plates, wondering which names to put on your "must-have" list? You'd like to acquire a half dozen good ones without mortgaging the old homestead?

Just in case you have no opportunity to see many of the better irises "in person," I'll make a suggestion. For a collection of reliable performers that cost little (average less than 50 cents each) and cover a wide color range, here are 10 topnotchers:

Sierra Blue—smooth, fine blue
Gloriole—pale "frosted" blue
Los Angeles—white with blue "stitching" on petals
Gudrun—white
Golden Treasure—cream
Golden Majesty—rich yellow
City of Lincoln—yellow standards (upper petals), red falls
Christabel—red
Junaluska—copper, red and gold, blended
Frank Adams—tan standards, rosy-red falls.

Though modestly priced, all of these except the last one (which narrowly missed) rank currently in the "100 best" voted by judges of the American Iris Society, competing with newest varieties costing $25 and more

Prices are based largely on newness and scarcity of stock. A 1949 introduction, of which only a few plants are offered for sale, will command a [Turn to page 272

BIRTH

We are awed by a pyramid, wonder-struck by a star,
unable to grasp the complexity of an ocean liner,

Yet none of these can compare with the supreme miracle of the universe:
a newborn baby.

By J. D. Ratcliff

Comprehend, if you can, how the most minute fragment of life—a single cell, just on the fringe of the microscopic world—can divide and redivide to make the billions of cells in the body of a baby. Think of the inordinate number of tissues and organs that sprang from this initial fleck of clay: the hair, the nails, the skin, the brain, the eyes, the ductless glands. Each step of the creative process represents a series of exquisitely intricate events, each timed to the other in hair-line sequence.

Almost any high-school biology student feels competent to explain the facts of life. The research man lacks this self-assurance. There are, he readily admits, great gaps in his knowledge. At best, he can supply only the crudest outline of the stirring drama.

It has not been his fortune to observe the evolution of a human life—as Dr. William Beaumont last century charted man's digestive processes. Beaumont, an army surgeon stationed at Mackinac Island, had as a patient a French-Canadian whose abd had been opened by a gunshot wound wound failed to heal, and for several Beaumont made direct observation o human digestive process.

Lacking such an opportunity to stud man reproduction, scientists have piec gether the picture as best they can. have used X-rays to peer into the wom observe the growing life. Yet, f this vast number, only one will com- its destiny: fertilization of the egg.

e actual mating takes place in the fallo- tube, the 3- to 5-inch canal that con- he egg from ovary to uterus, or womb. process of fertilization has been ob- d in animals. Not long ago, Drs. John and Arthur T. Hertig, of Harvard, ucted an epochal research. They re- ed human ova from fallopian tubes re- d from women because of disease. They d these eggs with male sperm. Under microscopes they watched sperm at- eggs—and saw the first halting steps rd life as cell division started in the egg.

the same time the process is no less rous for the fact that it has been ob- d. It is astonishing that the minute, le sperm can bore its way into the large relatively tough egg. Possibly it pro- s a chemical which softens the shell, or bly the shell itself weakens to permit ance. In either case, only one sperm is itted. After that, all others are turned . To accomplish this turning away, the of some creatures shoot out tiny fingers ing away unwanted sperm. It has also suggested that once a sperm cell has ed admittance, the shell hardens in- tly to bar the way to all others.

he particular sperm the egg accepts de- ines the sex of the child which will be 280 days later (for comparison, the ation period of an opossum is 11 days, n elephant 600 days). Half of all male carry girl-producing X chromosomes, half boy-producing Y chromosomes. The egg carries only the X's. Hence, if an X-bearing chromosome enters the egg, a girl baby will result; if a Y, there will be a boy. Sex, therefore, is dependent on the father.

Once the cells fuse, the curtain slowly rises on the most fundamental of all dramas. The egg, now fertilized, is still in the fallopian tube—a threadlike opening, no larger than a broom straw. This channel contains thousands of minute cilia—hair-like protrusions which wave like wheat in the wind. It is their job to move the fragile egg on a leisurely journey toward the uterus—a trip that requires something like three days. During this time, cell division has started in the egg. The original cell has split apart to make two cells, these two to make four, etc.

A stirring rush of events gets underway with perfect timing. First, the ovary secretes a hormone, estrogen, which it empties into the blood stream. This remarkable chemical has an all-important job to perform. It has a specific action on the uterus. Under its influence, walls of that organ thicken. Networks of new blood vessels spring up with amazing rapidity, and there is an enormous increase in uterine glands. The purpose of this activity is to provide nourishment for the new life. Once this job is completed, the ovary springs to new activity. The tiny crater from which the egg erupted rapidly fills with a yellowish, waxy stuff—the corpus luteum. It, too, produces a hormone—progesterone. It is the job of this chemical to quiet the rhythmic contractions of the uterus—otherwise, the fragile egg might be injured or discarded.

In a sense, all of this activity is like preparing a house—the uterus—for an honored guest. If the guest—a fertilized ovum—does not arrive, all the preparations have been in vain. Excess tissue breaks down and is discarded. But in the case we are interested in, the guest does arrive, right on schedule.

Once the fertilized egg reaches the uterus—a muscular organ approximately the size and shape of a small pear—it leads an apparently aimless existence for six days. It drifts around the uterine cavity, carried by fluid currents. Were any foreign body placed in the uterus, that organ would contract to expel it. But it makes no effort to discard the new life.

This six-day period of apparently aimless—or at least unexplained—drifting represents a highly critical period for the fertilized egg. By now its food supply, the microscopic yolk of the original egg, is near exhaustion. The life it carries is dangerously near extinction. The egg reacts to this hazard. It selects a spot on the red, velvet-smooth uterine wall. It apparently secretes something—possibly an enzyme—which eats a tiny niche in the wall. Then it shoots out tiny feelers with which to draw nourishment. Now, at last, the embryo is safe. It has a nest, and has tapped an always dependable source of food.

From this point out, one wonder piles rapidly on top of another. The rounded clump of cells becomes the morula—which is Latin for mulberry. Then this minute berry of life grows into a tiny hollow sphere, which is filled with fluid. Over it, a membrane forms which will become the placenta. Through this placenta the growing life will take nourishment from the mother, and will discharge its body wastes—to be excreted by her kidneys. From now on, until the moment of birth, it will live a submarine life, immersed in a bath of amniotic fluid—the watery stuff that fills the sac in which the baby is forming. At one point in its development, the baby will even have primitive gill slits—a reminder of the fact that all life sprang from the seas.

By the end of the third week, the growing life is a tiny fleck of grayish tissue. But even at this point, it has a primitive heart, a tiny pulsating tube; and its own system of blood vessels. Already it is manufacturing its own blood which is quite independent of the blood supply of the mother, separated from the mother's circulatory system by the placental barrier. The baby's blood, note in passing, may be an entirely different type blood from that of the mother.

During this third week, other striking things have happened. A rudimentary nervous system has been forming; a brain of microscopic proportions, a threadlike spinal cord, even smaller nerves.

The first evidences of a bony structure don't appear until the end of the sixth week. Up to this point, the embryo has been indistinguishable from the embryos of other mammals. But by the end of the sixth week it is recognizable, even to the unaided eye, as a human being. The head is forming, and during the following week, fingers and toes will appear. By the end of the ninth week, the face, a tiny miniature, is completely formed. Still, the baby is almost unbelievably small. At this point, it weighs only 1/15th of an ounce.

By the end of the third month, most organs are completed and functioning, but the head is large in proportion to the rest of the body. If born at this time, and placed in a bowl of warm water, the infant will make feeble movements in a vain struggle for life. But it is not nearly ready for an independent existence in a hostile world.

Up to this point, the mother is aware of the new life only by external signs. She may feel morning sickness and has, of course, ceased menstruating. Now she can feel a small lump just above the pelvic area—the rapidly enlarging uterus. At first, pear-shaped, the uterus assumes a globular form, then, later on, an ovoid, or bottle shape. By now, the uterus has undergone almost unbelievable expansion. By volume, it has increased 500 times! It has pushed other organs aside, almost filling the abdominal cavity, and even push- [Turn to page 151

Every house has one spot where most of the family activity takes place. It may be a recreation room, especially planned for your hobbies. It may be a large kitchen where your family congregates to chat while dinner is being cooked. Or it may be a large and comfortable living room.

In Better Homes & Gardens Five Star Home No. 1905, the spot around which daily life revolves is none of these. It is a small area, about 80 square feet, but it does the job of an area three times its size. It is the core of the house—because it is the center of activity and because it is in almost the exact center of the house.

When Designer Vernon Putnam put on paper the ideas we wanted to incorporate in the house, they read something like this:

1. A large living room with a fireplace and picture window, the room placed so it could be closed off without making any other rooms inaccessible.

2. Play area for children near and within sight of the kitchen, but not in it.

3. Dining space separated from the kitchen and living room, but only a few steps from both.

4. A compact bath with a high window to eliminate the need for shades.

5. A combination carport and porch that would save the expense of building a garage, and provide an outdoor play [Turn to page 156

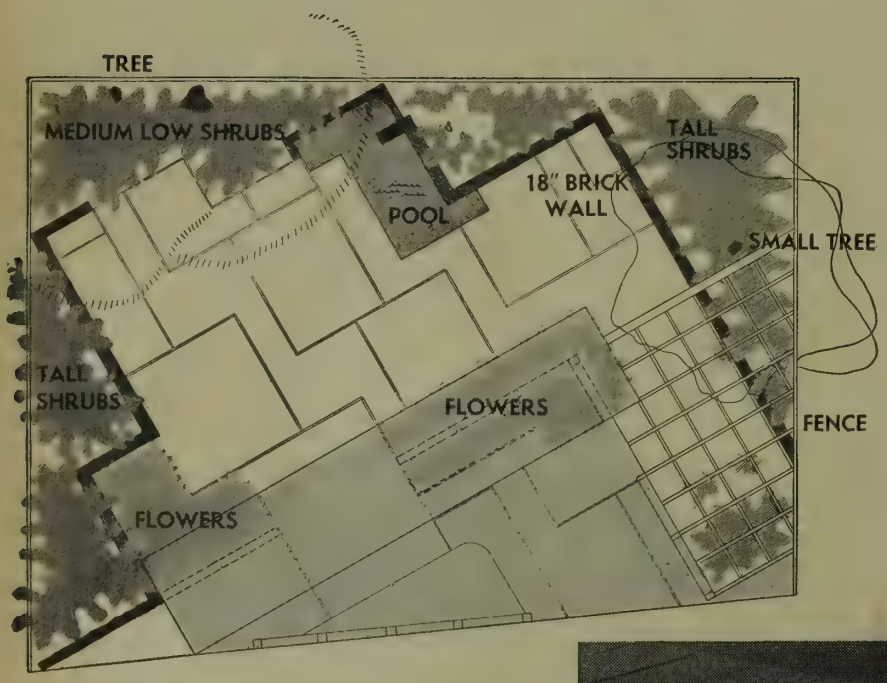
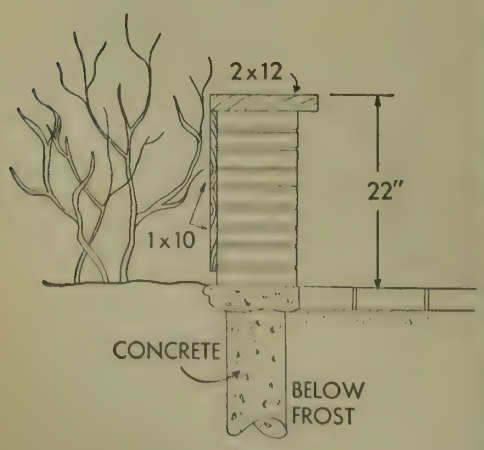
How to get elbowroom on a small lot



See how professional designers get a big look and space for real outdoor living into cramped quarters

By J. Evans Hendricks



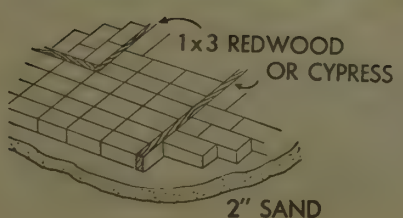
Would you believe, at first glance, that everything you see in these four pictures lies within a space 45 feet one way and less than 25 the other? It's no trick of the camera. Skilled planning did it. But anyone can adopt the means used here to squeeze the most use out of a small outdoor living space, yet hold the upkeep down:

—keep the center open
—mass the plantings along the edges
—lead your garden in, and your house out.

Paving of some sort is an advantage, both from the use angle, and because, once it's laid, it cuts upkeep costs right down to the bone.

By applying the principle that no one is shut in who doesn't feel that he is, a design was developed which apparently pushes the boundary fence back. Your eyes are led out from the house by the longer lines of the paving, the pool, and the seat-wall. Flowers were brought inside the glass to give the outdoor feel and look that much sooner. Designer: Theodore Osmundson, Jr., of Osmundson, Staley, and Gibson, landscape architects, of Oakland, California

You get triple use from a seat-wall like this. It gives you a lot of extra seats, and doubles for tables, too, when you need them in a hurry. It controls the planting in a good way, and cuts out the need for edgings and hand trimming. And it's also a practical shelf for potted plants



Dull green fence gives privacy. A simple twist of perforated copper tubing makes fountain for the shallow pool. Water is circulated by an inexpensive pump

The feeling of roominess is upped further by full-length glass and by using only low plants next house. Wooden door-grill frames, but doesn't hide, the view

Here it is—real elbowroom—privacy—lots of open floor on which to pull your chairs about to get sun, shade, or pleasant warmth tempered by egg-crate trellis—the tinkle of water into pool safe for children—flowers—and low upkeep. Something you can use?

We call our home "Balla Machree," which means

House o' my heart

By Marie Wallace

The house on the cover

Our home, Balla Machree, is built on a high point above the Chagrin River, an hour's drive east of Cleveland. Trees on the surrounding hills hide it from everyone but flyers.

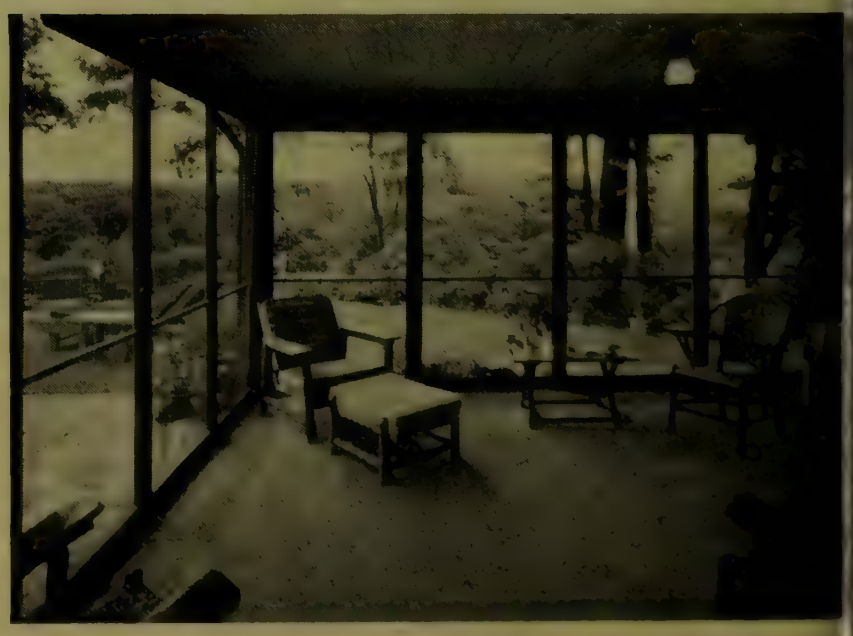
We built Balla Machree 10 years ago, and during that time we have found it a perfectly livable year-around house, and ideal from the standpoints of convenience, comfort, and ease and economy of upkeep. Its plan could be used anywhere.

The exterior was designed for a minimum of upkeep. Rough chestnut siding originally was stained a silver gray, and now it is beautifully weathered. The shutters, at first barn red, have faded to a raspberry color. Neither siding nor shutters need further care. The cypress shakes on the roof have been oiled only twice in 10 years.

The inside of the cottage is easily maintained. There's no wallpaper to tear off or clean, no curtains to launder, no unnecessary floor space. You can sweep, dust, scrub, and shine the entire cottage in two hours.

Our architect, Clyde Merrell, added some unusual touches. The two large light fixtures which drop from the ceiling in the big room, for instance, are made of iron gas pipe. We found the fixtures' old lamp chimneys in the attic of a general store, and fitted them into collars of scalloped copper.

Like those often found in early American homes, our stone fireplace chimney is asymmetrical—one side straight, the other slanted. On the outside, the chimney has a deep vertical groove down the center that helps make its height the dominant feature of the house when seen from the road. We can load our fireplace woodbox from outdoors.



We eat in many places—on the screened porch in summer, in the bay with the big picture window in cold weather, on a lookout we have paved, high above the river, or barbecue fashion in the outdoor cookhouse.

For us, our home is perfect. It has the convenience of modern planning, plus an atmosphere of tradition. As time goes by, Balla Machree becomes more and more the house of our hearts.

Every man needs a corner of his own

Any man will consider himself lucky to have one of these

By Harry Richardson

You probably have some spot in the house you gravitate towards naturally whenever you read, or relax, or have work to do. With a little planning, your favorite corner can be made even more comfortable and add a much-needed masculine touch to the atmosphere of your home.

You don't need much: an easy chair with a place for your smoking equipment; a desk big enough to operate it if you want to write a letter or bring work home from the office, or a corner where you can display your hobby. Here are seven suggestions, any one of which may be the very thing you need—exactly what your home may need to give it more character.

If you like to concentrate, a "workbench" without any frills may be what you want. Two metal filing-drawer sections and plywood make a desk, pine shelving takes care of necessary books, and a spare corner takes care of the thinker

If you're a collector of antique toys, rare books, stamps, or what not, you can find a way to use your hobby decoratively. Whether you ride your hobby hard or only occasionally, chances are you'll appreciate having your collections close at hand, and be proud to entertain friends

A lot of bloom fo

By Fleeta Brownell Woodroffe

To convince yourself you're both rich and lucky, try growing your own flowers from seed. It's one of the pleasantest and surest ways. How else could you acquire so many flowers for so small an investment? Where else could you have a hand in producing such miracles of color, merely by following a few simple directions?

Annuals—zinnias, petunias, asters, marigolds, and the like—are your best bet for showy bloom you can enjoy within a matter of weeks. Just do this—

- You first choose a spot for them that gets sun for at least five hours a day.
- Fork or spade the soil a good 8 inches deep, then pulverize and smooth it.
- Because seedlings in rows are easier to identify than seeds sown broadcast, mark off rows according to the sizes of the seeds. Make inch-deep furrows for zinnias and nasturtiums, only half that deep for larkspur and cosmos. For petunias, sweet alyssum, and poppies, roughen soil a little, then sow by covering seeds with just a dusting of fine dry soil.
- Water the rows before planting. Shade with folded newspapers, burlap, or a veil of grass clippings. Remove burlap and paper when the first green seedlings start humping up into the light.
- Space your seedlings. You can thin by transplanting. Move enough seedlings so that each has room to develop. This is 12 to 20 inches for zinnias and the larger marigolds, as little as 8 inches apart for sweet alyssum, phlox, and portulaca.
- Keep soil about the roots when shifting your plants. Settle in place with a cup apiece of water in which you've dissolved a good plant food, at the rate of two tablespoons to each gallon of water.

New varieties to give you more cut flowers and a still better show for the money

Style on a budget

Even a tight-fitting budget can yield enough charm to make a house a home

By Helen Ave

It was one of the those houses that are offered to the ill-housed third of the nation. It was a house of prewar quality only because the plan came off the drafting table when rough-plaster walls, arched doorways, and wall niches were in vogue. It was one of those over-priced houses late-comers to the wartime real-estate boom had to take or go back to their rented rooms.

Dave and Betty Claytor of Grand Rapids, Michigan, had no illusions about it, but they weren't going to let it get them down. They had practically nothing to furnish it with but a tight-fitting budget, plenty of ingenuity, and courage. What they accomplished will make some couples recall their own first days during the depression; it should be an inspiration to many another young couple faced with the problem of making something out of very little.

The Claytors, remember, had a double problem: How to make a little box of a house look like home to them, despite undersized rooms, too-few and too-small windows, and a dated interior; and how to do it without going into debt. When you face a situation like that, the woman of the house doesn't solve her drapery problems by measuring the windows and flying down to the best store in town. Instead of calling in a cabinetmaker, the man of the house forgets that he isn't handy, starts figuring that bookcase himself. You think before you spend; that's the way the Claytors had to do.

Before they did any remodeling or decorating, they sketched the living room and their two bedrooms on graph paper and drew their furnishings to scale. They wanted to be sure that they spent wisely, that their small house didn't end up looking stuffed. Their first purchases were only the bare essentials, the basics for sleeping, eating, and sitting.

You see what they started with in the "Before" pictures in this story. Their rooms looked pretty austere in those days. That's where the courage came in because they had a plan, and waiting, as well as working, was part of it.

They had to wait until they hit that out-and-out bargain in lamps for their bedroom; until they turned up that secondhand easy chair, until the budget could stand what it took for paint, and lumber, and cotton goods. It took them nine months of working, scheming, budgeting, and spending out of income, but they didn't go into debt, and they [Turn to page 294

"Maybe if we wait awhile . . ." This chair played an important part in the Claytors' plan. Betty sat and waited until the budget could stand what it took for a table, lamp, and chairs

"We'll come up with an idea like this . . ." Plain, white 59-cents-a-yard sheeting can be the stuff your dreams are finally made of. When pleating pins and bastings come out, curtains can be laundered at flatwork rates. Light-line Provincial-type chairs keep living room from looking heavy with furniture

Dave and Betty studied this corner carefully. They couldn't afford to make mistakes. They didn't like their rough-plaster walls, arches, and niches, but they couldn't afford replastering. Deep-brown paint toned down the roughness (right). Bookshelves helped square the arch

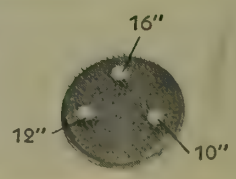
With hard work and $30 worth of lumber Dave framed ➡ the door with bookshelves and two cabinets. Radio at right is an old model faced with plywood to give it a built-in look. Old record player is below. Dave filled niches with plasterboard and a thin coat of plaster. Wall hanging is $1.35-a-yard cotton print glued to the wall

Provincial-style powder table that serves as a desk

←One touch of glamour. The Claytors played up one wall. It took Dave's hammer and saw and a little 1 by 10 pine to frame wall and bed. Betty supplied organdy ruffling and the chintz that was glued over facing of the bedside stands

"We could put out our chests." And well they might. They got a 75-inch chest, 12 drawers, for less than $60. They combined two 15 by 27 unpainted chests and a 12 by 21 model, center, and replaced wood knobs with brass handles

ABC's of flower arrangement

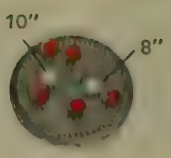


By Fae Huttenlocher

Now everyone can arrange flowers beautifully. Follow these pictures!

Here is a basic recipe for arranging flowers. If you have three flowers or branches (see 1); five, seven, or nine (see 2, 3, 4), these pictures show you how to use them for best effect. Follow this recipe for attractive arrangements with all flowers and branches. Note: To insure good results, you can buy needlepoint holders marked like those in the pictures below.

1 Three flowers: Place 16-inch, 12-inch, and 10-inch stems on 4-inch needlepoint holder in positions shown in diagram, right. Top blossom should be above center of holder. Arrange the two front flowers to point to your shoulders. The bowl used here is 10 inches long



2 Five flowers: Put 13-inch stem in back and to left of first tall stem. The 6-inch stem goes in center of grouping. See diagram. Arrange blossoms to face up toward highest blossoms. For a realistic feeling, keep each tulip's foliage close to the stem—as it actually grows

Photographs: Stanley

3 Seven flowers: Cut the left stem 10 inches long; the right 9 inches. White dots show where to place them. All stems, except the tall one in center, should be placed at angles, not straight up and down. Arrange flowers so that none of the blossoms touch another

4 Nine flowers: Add an 11-inch stem in the back, an 8-inch stem in the center, as in diagram. Check to see that you have placed flowers on needlepoint so they are facing up to the highest flower. This keeps your arrangement looking fresh as it would while growing

CANNED MEATS

Dinner in 30 minutes

By Myrna Johnston

When you want to get a good dinner with speed, it's handy to have the main dish within reach on the cupboard shelf.

There are eight dinners shown and every one of them starts with a can opener.

Check your grocer's and you'll find a great variety of canned meats—luncheon meat, hot tamales, little pig sausages, baked ham, corned beef hash, wieners and barbecue sauce, hamburger patties, corned beef. All these meats need is a brief heating in the oven or sizzling in the skillet.

This month's issue of Better Homes & Gardens has been planned to save you time—extra minutes, even hours—time you can have to spend in your garden, to relax with the morning paper, to visit down the street, to shop, or to play golf. We've planned meals you can fix in a hurry; short cuts you can put to work in the kitchen and all through the house. We show tools to make your work easier and save you time. TIME-SAVING MIXES even luscious spring desserts—designed for days n time is short. The base of each one is a pack-d mix. You take over from the package to create ew temptation in double-quick time.

Across the page, Baba au Orange with hot orange up . . . flaky Strawberry Shortcake with berries ween layers and heaped high on the top . . . conut Custard Pie . . . Gingerbread Strips with party pink and green icing . . . Chocolate-Nut Drop Cookies . . . fruited Lemon Custard with banana slices, orange wedges, and cherries on the stem . . . golden-brown Coconut Butterscotch Squares—all yours from a package.

They're desserts that look fancy, but they're fast, each one planned with an eye on the clock. The recipes are simple—see below.

Chocolate-Nut Drop Cookies

1 package chocolate cake mix
½ cup water
½ cup semi-sweet chocolate pieces
½ cup chopped California walnuts
½ teaspoon almond extract

Follow directions on package for making cookies, using ½ cup water. Stir in chocolate pieces and nuts. Drop from teaspoon onto greased cooky sheet. Bake in moderately hot oven (375°) 10 to 14 minutes. Makes about 4 dozen.

Gingerbread Strips

1 package gingerbread mix
1 cup chopped seedless raisins
1 cup chopped California walnuts
2 to 3 tablespoons orange juice
1½ cups sifted confectioners' sugar
1 teaspoon grated orange peel

Mix gingerbread according to directions on package; add raisins and walnuts. Pour into greased 9- by 13-inch pan. Bake in moderately hot oven (375°) 20 to 25 minutes. Cool slightly. Add enough orange juice to confectioners' sugar to make a spreading consistency. Add orange peel; mix well. Spread on gingerbread; cut in strips. Makes about 1½ dozen. If desired, trim strips with pink and green tinted frostings using a pastry tube. Or decorate with California walnut halves.

Coconut Custard Pie

1 package vanilla pudding mix
2 cups milk
1 tablespoon (1 envelope) unflavored gelatine
¼ cup water
¼ cup chopped maraschino cherries
½ teaspoon almond extract
1 cup heavy cream, whipped
½ cup toasted shredded coconut
9-inch baked pastry shell

Prepare vanilla pudding according to directions on package, using 2 cups milk. Soften gelatine in cold water; add to hot mixtures; stir until dissolved. Cover; cool slightly. Add cherries and almond extract; mix well. Fold in whipped cream. Pour into baked cooled pastry shell; sprinkle with coconut. Chill. Serves 8.

Pastry making is as easy as pie. Just open a package of piecrust mix. To make one pastry shell use one-half the package. Why not make the extra pastry in the form of tart shells, fill the next day for a surprise dessert. Piecrust mix makes flaky chicken and meat-pie toppers, too.

Strawberry Shortcake

¾ cup light cream or top milk
2 tablespoons sugar
2 cups biscuit mix
2 tablespoons butter or fortified margarine
1 quart strawberries

Add cream and sugar to biscuit mix; mix well. Pat out one-half of dough in 8-inch round pan, dot with butter. Pat remaining dough on top. Bake in hot oven (450°) 15 to 20 minutes. Split. Place strawberries between layers and over top. Serve with whipped cream. Note: For thicker layers, as shown, double amounts of cream, sugar, and biscuit mix. [Turn to page 237

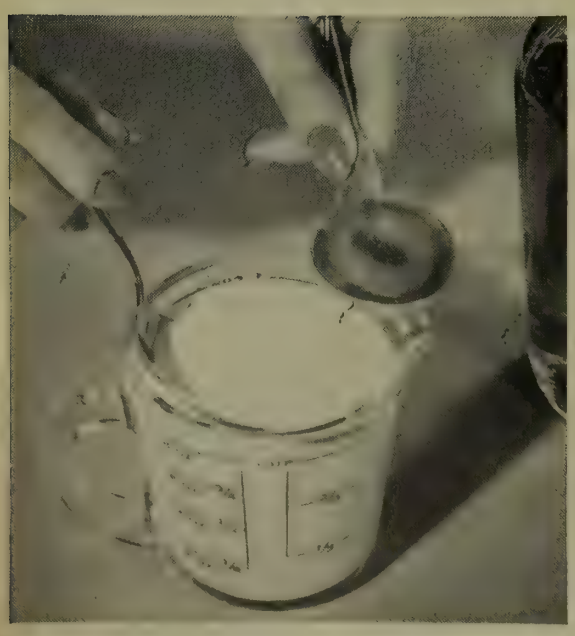
TIME-SAVING TRICKS

Short cuts for the cook

By Mary E. Carrick

It's the minutes you lose on the little jobs that keep you in the kitchen overtime.



While you're mixing a cake or making the salad, think of ways you can do that particular job faster. It may mean rearranging your equipment so you won't have to spend so much time and so many steps collecting it before you get the job under way. Or it may be some of the simple time-cutting tricks we show you in these pictures. There are a baker's dozen here, but hundreds more in your own kitchen.

To bake cupcakes. Paper liners save you time when you make cupcakes. A one-fourth cup measuring cup saves extra motions spooning the batter and keeps each cake the same size

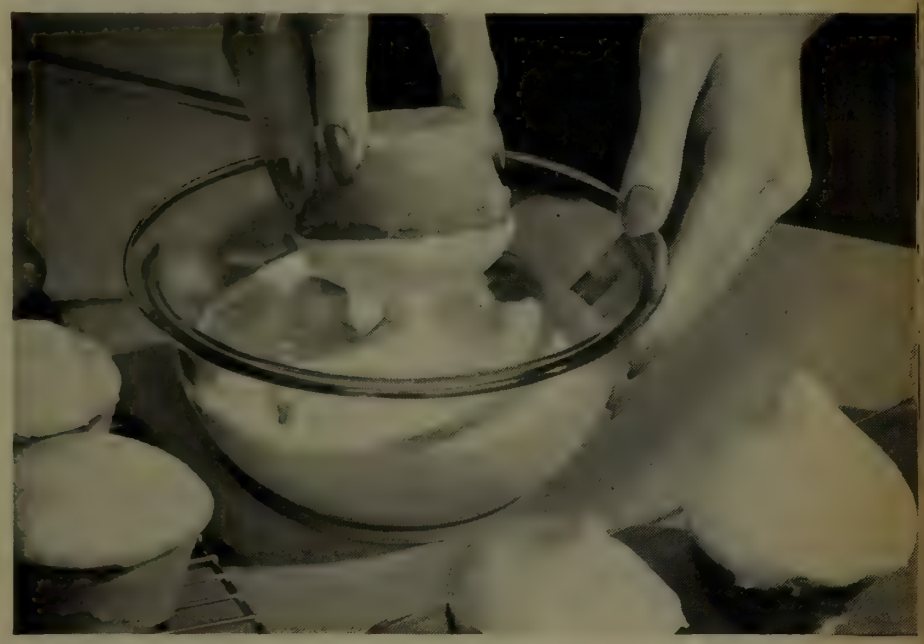
To hull strawberries. Use a teaspoon to hul strawberries. It does good work and it saves you time Wash the berries before stemming so no flavor's lost

To make sour cream. Add 2 tablespoons vinegar or lemon juice to 1 cup evaporated milk. Let stand awhile in a warm place. Sour milk the same way

To make croquettes. Cut out chilled croquette mixture with biscuit cutter. This saves handling the mixture and keeps croquettes uniform in size and shape

To season and flour meat. put the meat and c little seasoned flour in paper sack, shake the sack, th job's done. And you can get supper that much faste

o decorate a cake. Spread cake smoothly with eamy frosting, then dimple it with a broad spatula. r make decorative ridges by marking with fork tines



To cut rhubarb. With a sturdy knife slash a whole bunch of rhubarb or asparagus into even lengths—as shown in the picture. A stalk at a time saves no time

To make biscuits. Pat or roll biscuit dough on cooky sheet. Cut in squares, spread apart, bake as usual. These make good shortcakes for creamed chicken

o make rolled cookies. Form cooky dough in balls, place on cooky sheet. Flatten ith a tumbler dipped in granulated sugar. Each ball should be uniform size so cookies ill bake evenly. Use a measuring spoon to get same amount of dough every time

To frost cupcakes. Dip top of cooled cupcake into soft white frosting. Twirl it slightly, then quick turn it right side up so frosting will make a fancy peak. This way you can frost the cakes in easily half the time

Photographs: Wesley Bowman and Photography Inc.

To make layered salad. Use sliced peaches for ottom layer (they'll stay there) and sliced bananas or top (they float up). Chill in loaf pan. Slice to serve

To trim pie. Fit pastry into pan. Snip edges with kitchen scissors. Job is faster, trim is neater. For more pie-making speed, use packaged or homemade mix

To shell an egg. Cook eggs; cool quickly in cold water. Crack shells, then roll egg between palms till thoroughly crackled. Start shelling at air-pocket end

TIME-SAVING TOOLS

There's a faster way for each job

One way's fast, one way's slow. The tool makes the difference in the time the job takes

By Ida Ruth Younkin

Turn a clever kitchen tool on a tedious, minute-eating job and you can get your work done faster. That's what we've observed in the Tasting-Test Kitchen here at Better Homes & Gardens.

The pictures show the jobs, and the tools we depend on to do them. To make sure we hadn't fooled ourselves—that we do save time—we recorded the seconds and minutes the job took the old way and the new. So you see two pictures for each job, two ways to do that job. One way's fast, one way's slow.

The tool may be something as simple as a gravy maker or a nut chopper, a pair of tongs, or a special slicer. Whatever it is, a good gadget—the right tool—can make a big difference in the time your work takes. See if you have the tools we show here.

Put some pressure on the job. You'll get done faster

TIME-SAVING CARTS

Put your work on wheels

Who doesn't wish at times for another pair of hands, a third strong arm, brand-new feet? Perhaps all you really need is a willing set of wheels.

There's a whole new crop of serving carts, tables, and other devices—ball-bearinged, rubber-tired, useful standing still, but many times more useful when you make them collect and deliver, or place them to add surface when you need to move your work around. Here they are—on the job.

Put your work on wheels

You'll find carts in all sorts of materials: metal, wood, composition, glass, and combinations thereof. And they come in as many sizes, from the little one-square-footer that delivers beverages to the side of your chair and stands by in the sickroom, to slim three-shelf collapsibles, which look and act like the cart that makes the restaurant bus boy so efficient.

Make your faithful laundry or shopping cart do more lifting and carrying. Have you thought, for instance, of using a cart to encourage the children to pick up their own toys?

Kitchen cabinets come on wheels, too—see below.

Good ideas from the Sunkist Kitchen

You know how much more zest there is in tomato juice when you squeeze lemon in it. A wedge of lemon is standard equipment with tomato juice served in restaurants. Give tomato juice that extra zip at home, too. It's so easy!

Just adding lemon makes all juices 100% more appetizing. Be sure to try it with those especially bland ones, apple, pineapple, pear and prune juice. Adds sparkle, like sunlight on the breakfast table.

Flat slices of lemon are hard to squeeze, and provide less lemon than people want. Wedges are easy to get hold of and supply much more juice, more flavor. Try squeezing lemon on carrots, beets, cabbage, spinach, asparagus. Delicious!

Fish and sea food need those generous wedges most of all. Serve plenty! They're so decorative, too.

(By the way, do you know the wonderful trick of rubbing fish with lemon juice before cooking? It's the perfect seasoning—and banishes fish odor! Rub inside and out.)

Fresh Lemons Provide Very Special Health Values

Fresh lemons not only supply valuable amounts of vitamin B_1 but also rare vitamin P, and are among the richest known sources of vitamin C. Essential for youthful energy, sound teeth and gums, vitamin C is absent from most foods, scarce in most others. You need it daily. Fresh lemons are important. Whenever you add lemon, you add health.

Are you, perchance, one of those rather rare people who don't use lemon in tea? Eight out of ten do! Remember to serve lemon with tea to your guests—always. That delightful aromatic tang of lemon adds so much to tea. Bet you'll like it yourself!

Lemons help in so many ways! You need them every day. Remember them when you shop!

"Guessing-Gone" Angel Food!

You—an angel food artist?

No kidding—it's easy when you follow this recipe exactly!

No guessing how much to beat as you add sugar . . .

No guessing how much to fold as you add flour . . .

Count strokes, follow the recipe exactly . . . and the result will be —glory-garlanded angel food!

- Simple and Sure! Swans Down's "count-stroke" method!
- Tried and True! Recipe pretested by home cakemakers!
- A "Must," of course—Swans Down's superfineness!

"GUESSING-GONE" STRAWBERRY ANGEL FOOD

A new Swans Down recipe—proved perfect by new brides in home kitchens

Preparations. Let eggs stand at room temperature an hour or two before using. Start oven for moderate heat (375°F.).

- Sift flour once before measuring. (Be sure it's superfine Swans Down for "Guessing-Gone" results!) Lift by spoonfuls into cup until piled high, then level off by drawing spatula or straight knife across top. Do not pack or shake down. Sift sugar also.

Measure into sifter:

1 cup plus 2 tablespoons sifted Swans Down Cake Flour
½ cup sifted granulated sugar

Measure into large mixing bowl:

1¼ cups (10 to 12) egg whites—at room temperature
¼ teaspoon salt

Have ready:

1¼ teaspoons cream of tartar
1 cup sifted granulated sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla
¼ teaspoon almond extract

- Now—Swans Down's "Count-Stroke" Part!

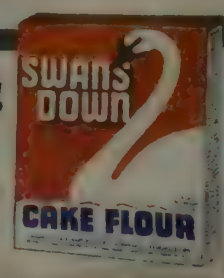
1. Sift flour and ½ cup sugar together four times.

2. Beat egg whites and salt with flat wire whisk or rotary egg beater until foamy. Sprinkle in cream of tartar and beat until stiff enough to hold up in soft peaks, but still moist and glossy.

3. Add the 1 cup of sugar in 4 additions by sprinkling 4 tablespoons at a time over egg whites and beating 25 strokes by hand or 25 turns of beater each time. Add flavorings and beat 10 strokes by hand or 10 turns of beater.

4. Add flour-and-sugar mixture in 4 additions, sifting it over egg whites. Fold in each addition lightly with whisk or spoon, turning bowl gradually and using 15 complete fold-over strokes each time. After last addition, fold 10 to 20 extra strokes.

Baking. Turn into ungreased 10-inch tube pan. Bake in moderate oven (375°F.) 30 to 35 minutes.



Cooling. Remove from oven and invert pan on rack until cake is cool (1 hour). To remove cake, loosen from sides of pan with spatula and around tube with slender knife, gently drawing cake from pan.

Serving. Spread cake thinly with Strawberry Icing made by mixing 2 cups sifted confectioners' sugar, 2 teaspoons lemon juice, dash of salt, and ¼ cup crushed or sieved strawberries (quick-frozen or fresh.) Cut cake in thin wedges.

(All measurements are level.)

Do they groan when you arrive?

By Teresa Ferster Glazier

When Cousin Will opens your letter at the breakfast table announcing your prospective visit, does his family burst into exclamations of delight or slump into groans? If you'd really like to know, answer the following questions. Your score will tell you how welcome you are among your friends as a house guest.

Do you let your hostess know you are coming, rather than surprising her in the midst of redecorating or on the day of her big bridge party?

Do you announce upon your arrival how long you intend to stay, rather than keeping the whole family guessing as to what plans they can make?

Do you slip easily into the family's plans, rather than expecting them to drop everything to take you sight-seeing or shopping?

Do you get up when the family does, instead of expecting a special breakfast since you are on a holiday?

If there is no household help, do you assume a share of the house or yard work so that your host and hostess won't be worn to a frazzle by the time you leave?

Are you thoughtful enough to suggest taking the family downtown for dinner occasionally to give your hostess a break?

Do you show your appreciation both in words and gifts, rather than unconcernedly accepting hospitality as your due?

In choosing a farewell gift for your hostess do you make sure it is something that she really wants and not just another horror to store in the attic? If you can't be sure, do you slip something into Junior's bank instead?

Do you remember to do little things to please each member of the family, such as taking Jackie to a movie, playing checkers with Granddad, presenting teen-age Bessie with some of that perfume she has been talking about?

Do you write a letter of appreciation soon after your departure, being explicit in recounting the enjoyment you have had?

Quite a job, being a good house guest! But the dividends are big, and the pleasure is really all yours. Give yourself 10 for each question you were able to answer in the affirmative. Then add up your score. Here is what your hosts say after you leave:

Less than 50—If Joe and Jane ever descend upon us again, we're going to put up a smallpox sign!
50 or 60—Thank goodness, that's over!
70 or 80—We're pretty tired, but it was good to see Joe and Jane.
90 or 100—What fun! If only they could have stayed longer!

Plastic bags: Some have zippers, some have drawstrings

Purposely planned for your artistic taste are the colorful plastic bags with modern designs of fruit, plaids, and polka dots. If you prefer a clear view to the inside and bright colors, too, choose plain bags with gay bindings.

For some purposes bags of assorted sizes that close with a drawstring are just the thing. You can also get both large and small bags with slide fasteners. For frequent on-and-off-again use, the bags without any special closure serve a variety of purposes. Just fold over the ends or use clips which come with these bags. Any time you want a tighter package, seal with tape.

You can use plastic films in damp places without concern about mildew. There's no need to pamper them around the kitchen, either, because these new plastics shun grease and food stains.

Dousing in warm sudsy water cleans any plastic bag. Rinse them in clear water, then pat dry with towel—inside and out.

It's the everyday usefulness of these versatile bags that really counts. You'll find their utility extends to the entire household—and even to travel and sports.

Let's bake Ginger Crisps!

When you use spices, use full flavored spices —check your spice shelf frequently and replace half empty cans which are out of date and out of flavor. Durkee's Spices are fresh packed with full flavor and aroma. There is a complete assortment to add exciting new flavors all through your menu from soup to dessert. Durkee's Ground Ginger is one of the most popular spices in my kitchen. I depend on that keen, tangy ginger for good gingerbread, sauces and cookies. Here's my recipe for chewy confection-like cookies which I think you will like.

Ginger Crisps

⅓ cup Durkee's Margarine
½ cup brown sugar
½ cup molasses
1½ tsps. Durkee's Ground Ginger
½ tsp. grated lemon rind
1 cup all-purpose flour

Place margarine, sugar and molasses in heavy pan. Stir with wooden spoon over low heat until mixture is well blended. Remove from heat. Mix Ground Ginger and lemon rind with flour and add slowly to molasses mixture, stirring constantly. Drop mixture from teaspoon onto greased cooky sheets, 3 inches apart. Bake in moderate oven (350°F) 10-15 minutes. Cookies harden quickly, so allow pan to remain in oven while removing cookies, one at a time, with spatula. While still warm curl over handle of wooden spoon. Store in airtight container. Approx. 2½-3 dozen cookies.

Your everyday salads and vegetables become party fare when you dress them up with egg slice designs. You cut hard-cooked eggs into slender circles or wedges. Then you make a pattern with the slices.

For attractive egg designs, place eggs in cold water; heat slowly to boiling. Reduce heat and simmer 20 minutes. Plunge immediately into cold water to prevent a dark ring around yolks. Now you're ready to make a design on the bottom of a mold, top of greens in the salad bowl or vegetable dish—see pictures.

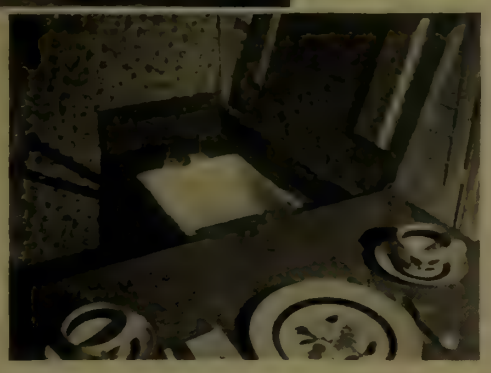
int-sized kitchen nook



with an old-time flavor

By Martha Darbyshire

Spacesaving minimum kitchens needn't be all chrome and white. Paneling, wallpaper, bright pottery can make the most efficient 2x4 kitchen blend neatly into a corner of your room. Here's the kitchen nook that Mrs. Viola Bogue, Los Angeles, fitted into one corner of her Early American living-bedroom. See how smoothly it operates, how cleverly it fits the old-fashioned look of the room.

dinnertime, you have a plete kitchen in a few ie feet of space. A tiny and refrigerator stand in back cupboard. One leaf e dining bar lifts up to gl a running-water sink lose-up at right). Dishes food are stored inside the g bar or on back shelves

Between meals, you can close the paneled doors and hide the kitchen equipment. Since the whole back wall is paneled, the doors themselves are hardly noticeable. The wallpaper and hanging shelf give the kitchen nook an old-fashioned flavor. Ruffles on the bar stools match other slipcovers in the room

What do you do about Young Love?

By Oren Arnold

When teen-age Tom takes to toting home a maiden's books or your Barbara blossoms out as the dream girl of a senior patrol leader, are you ready for it—and are they? Take it from a dad who's been through it twice with daughters, your attitude makes a world of difference— the difference between a wholesome lifelong adjustment to the idea of two different sexes— and bewilderment, disillusionment, and heartbreak

All the good people in our block—it is a typical Suburbia—recently have watched the birth of a first love.

Three young gentlemen at Jeannie Wilson's birthday party slipped behind the scenes and poured salt into the lemonade. It was all in the category of Good Clean Fun, grade-school level, and might have happened to any 13-year-old lass of any time. But lo, of the three musketeers, one turned traitor. Master Marvin Baird snuck around to Jeannie before refreshment time and warned her!

For such perfidy Marvin was forever a leper among males—forever being a week or so in our block. But he didn't care. Next day he showed it by a new and strangely satisfying superiority to the twerps with whom he was most bosom pal only yesterday. Breakfast was not quite over at the Wilsons' before he knocked at their kitchen door and looked bravely up at Mrs. Wilson.

"May Jeannie go to the movies this afternoon?" His voice was basso profundo, but soared coloratura on the word movies.

Of the two, Mother Wilson was the more ill at ease. Jeannie herself overheard and came in poised. "Of course," she answered. "And thank you, Marvin. About 2 o'clock?"

My wife and I have the facts direct from Wilsons, and from the Bairds. But for that m ter, the romance is now public information; deed it is being somewhat flaunted. Reaction the other young folk in the neighborhood h been most interesting. After a few feeble gestu at teasing and ridicule, gestures that were co pletely ineffectual, Bobby and Tom and Ellen and our own Rosie and the four McDon kids and those who normally drift across alleys to play have lapsed into a quietly appr ing study of the love-making. They aid it times, yet they're detached, learning. I h watched birds apparently do the same thing

You, too, have seen it. And if you have laugh too much, or have been scornful, you should ashamed. It is distinctly none of my busin and in the maturity of my 48 years I feel s the Jeannie and Marvin romance won't end for life. Yet I am in a mood to defend then would fight desperately anyone who tried break it up. For it is beautiful.

Adolescent love is beautiful! Despite ha boiled realism, despite modern sophisticatio still is. And we as parents, who are responsi for the happiness of the [Turn to page flame broiled spring chicken, crisp on top and done clear to the bone

The flavor of broiled spring chicken depends on the broiler. With Magic Chef's high level, Swing Out Broiler, it's perfect! In this extra deep broiler the chicken can be kept 3 inches below the tip of the low gas flame. Brown it for 5 minutes, then turn every 5 minutes until done. When the chicken is done, transfer it to the broiler tray (which is really a removable tree-and-well platter) and serve piping hot. How to judge a house

How sound is the house you're thinking of buying? Here's a guide to good purchasing—read it before you sign on the dotted line

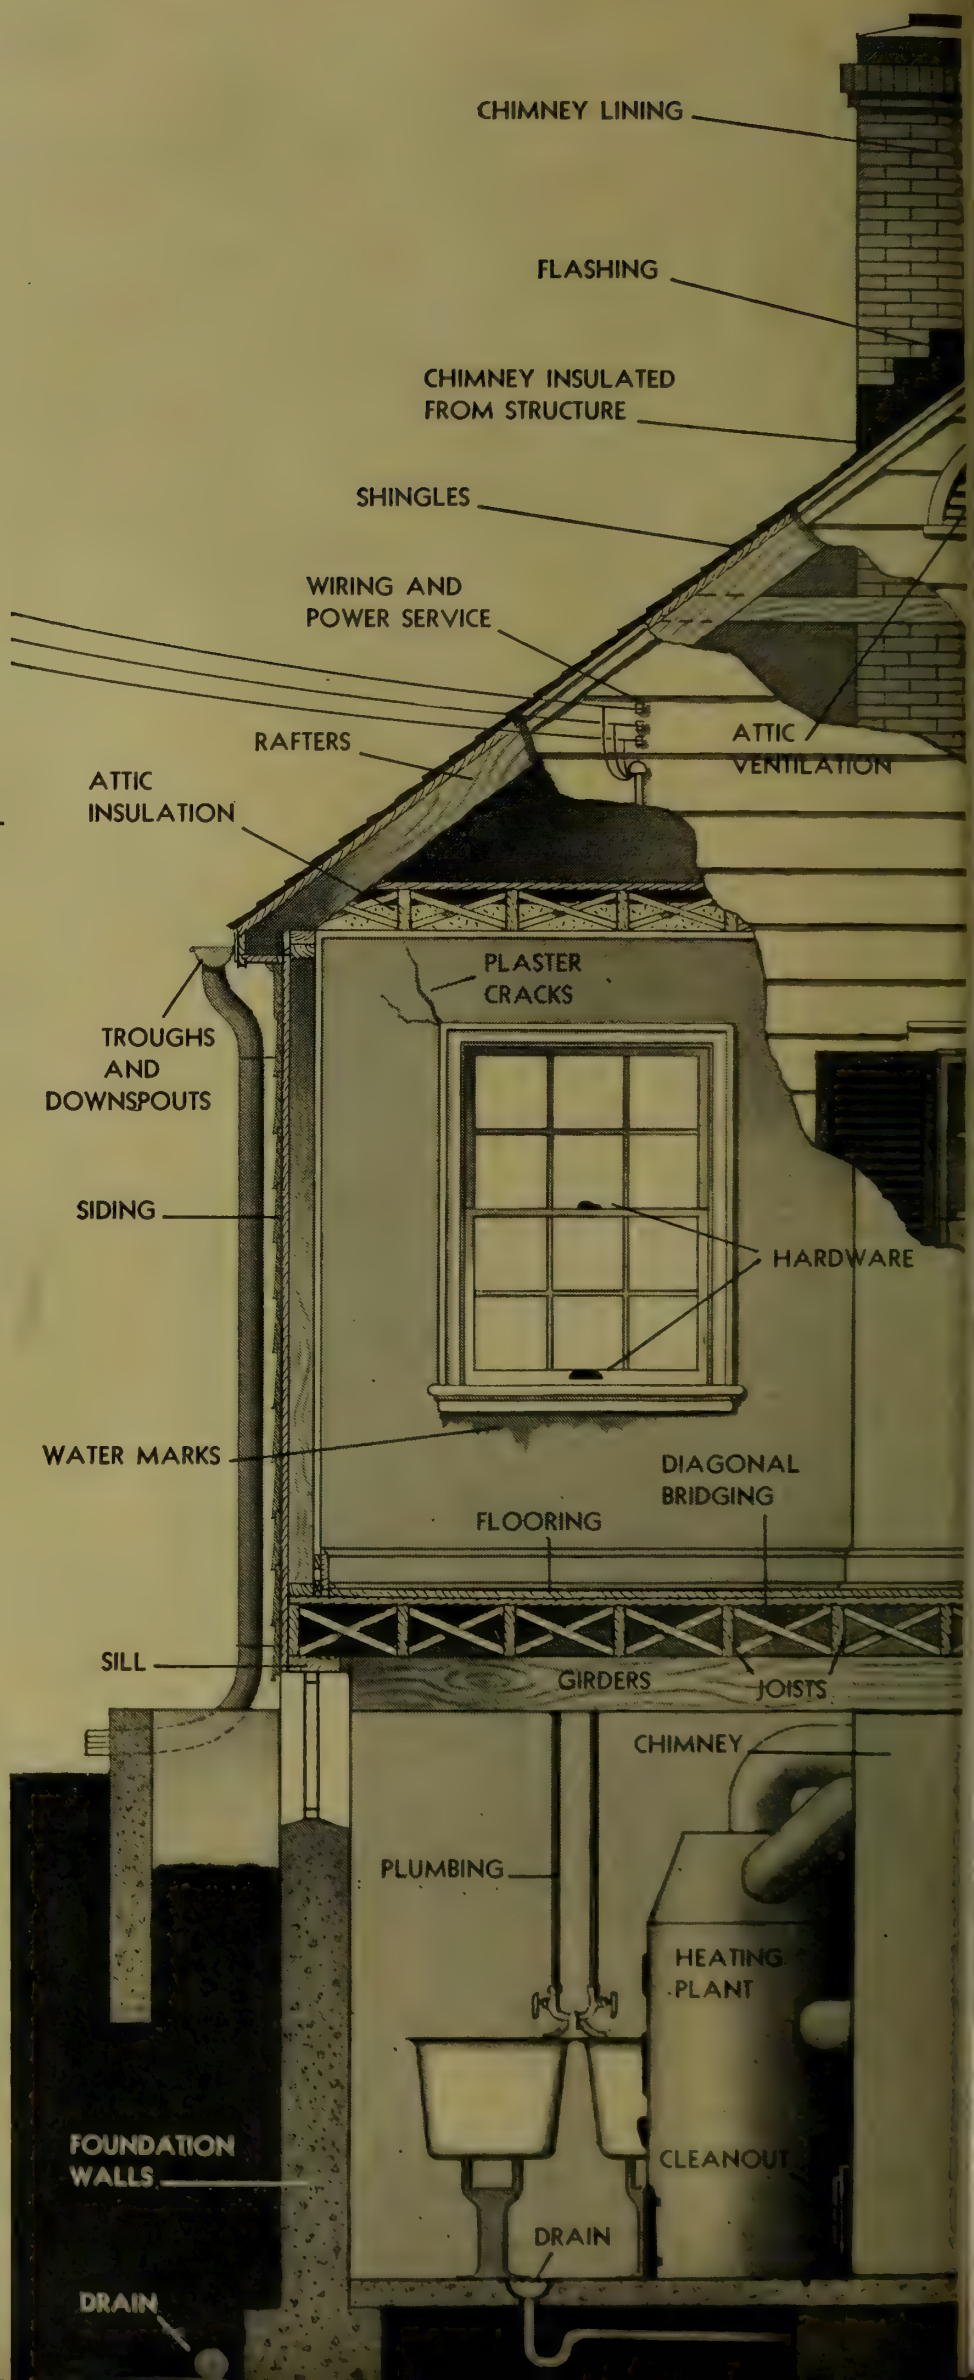
By Arthur R. Lee

Thousands of houses will be bought this spring. And a large percentage of them won't be adequately inspected before the new owners commit themselves to years of mortgage payments.

There are a number of reasons for this. Lack of information is high on the list, so is sentiment.

Your practical judgment generally can be relied upon to produce a house in a neighborhood that will prove compatible; it will insure that the house is convenient to a good school, to church, to friends, to a shopping district, and to a bus line. The bank will determine that the total price is in keeping with the family income, and that the title is clear. But no one is going to tell you whether the house will need major repairs in a year or two. That you will have to determine for yourself.

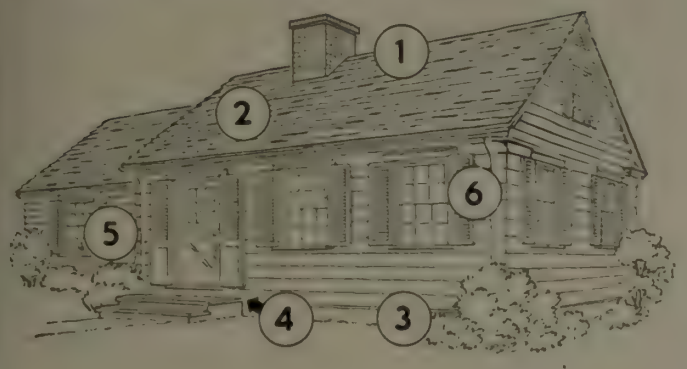
What most house-hunters need is a short course in detection to help them find and interpret the clues by which a house-builder's sins reveal themselves.



Fortunately, most builders have pretty good professional morals. The fact that so many inexperienced buyers are able to live in their purchases with satisfaction testifies to the honesty of builders.

However, there always are a few speculators ready to take advantage of a favorable market, and there are unsound houses, both new and old, for sale now.

So remember this in buying your home: It represents one of the largest investments you will make. You will be paying for it for a long, long time.



With a knowledge of what to look for, you can do a better job of examining the house you are considering. Let's take a trip through this house you have your eye on, and see what we can find. Note down your findings as you go along.

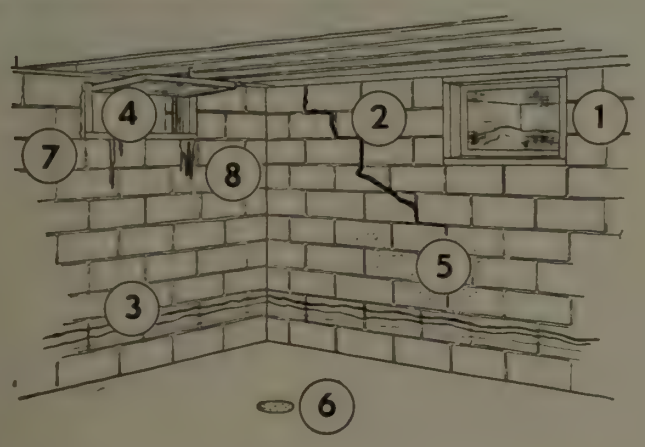
ook it over from the outside . . .



RST, for the outside. Look at roof line: curves are interesting their place, but their place is not the ridge. Sagging here (1) is a ious structural defect, difficult to nedy. Are there bricks or mortar nts missing from the chimney? w does the shingling look? (You y have to check this again from upstairs window, to get a closer w.) Are the shingles warped or cked? Make sure joints in succes- e courses of shingles are stag- red (2). Are the eaves straight? eck the presence and condition gutters and downspouts (5). ist on the bottom of eaves oughs and on downspouts shows ey aren't carrying away the wa- as they were designed to. Rain ter should be led away from the use foundation to the sewer, to a y well or to an area where it can n off without damage. Are the indows plumb and level (6)? If ey aren't the house may have tled. Is the sill, where the house framing meets the foundation, level? Poke the sill with your knife, in search of termites or rot. Termites leave tunnels of earth on foundations as they invade a house from the ground—look for such traces. Look, also, for copper sheathing (3) above the top of the foundation, with edges turned down at a 45-degree angle as protection against termites, if the house is located in a neighborhood infested with the pests. (Neighbors, or an exterminator, can tell you if any are present.) In such a neighborhood, beware houses built so wood touches the earth.

Are the porches or steps sagging away from the house (4)? If so, their foundations probably were not poured below the frost line. And that may mean the builder was careless elsewhere.

While you're outside, make sure walks and the driveway haven't large cracks (if paved), aren't too steep, and are well drained.

Then check the basement

NEXT, look at the basement. If it doesn't go under the entire house, find out if there is sufficient crawl-space (1) under the unexcavated portion to allow for repair of pipes, electrical wiring and ducts. The crawl-space should be at least 2½ feet deep and should be well ventilated. Pipes under the crawl-space preferably are covered to reduce heat loss and guard against freezing. Floor joists over the crawl-space should be insulated with sheets of insulating board.

Foundation walls should be supported by footings large enough to bear the weight of the house. You can't see them, but cracks in the basement wall (2) will show that the footings aren't strong enough.

Another construction feature you can't see is the system of subsoil drainage pipes needed in wet ground. But again, its absence will be given away by signs of basement flooding. Water-rings on walls (3) evidence such flooding in the past; bright red rust on iron will provide a clue to dampness.

How to judge a house inches thick if made of concrete block, poured concrete, or hollow tile, 12 inches if of brick, 14 inches if of rough stone. You can make your measurements at window openings (4). Incidentally, old-fashioned stone walls give away the age of the house.

Examine the foundation walls carefully. Is there any indication the walls are caving in, or have started to sag? Beware foundations that have holes, broken or cracked places. If the walls are of tile, look for flakes or powder where defective blocks may have chipped (5). Does the basement look as tho it had been painted recently conceal repairs? Sniff the air it musty? The basement is a g place to look for chewed pa scraps and other signs of roden

Check for a basement drain —pour water down it to see th works. Open the windows (me framed ones are best)—if t stick, they may be squeezed by much pressure on the sill. G around basement windows (7) mean drafts, and show poor w manship. Watermarks (8) will whether the windows are tight

Is the heating plant adequate?

NOW, look at the heating plant—it represents a good share of the house cost. Has it a gas or oil burner, a stoker, or is it a hand-fired coal model? Automatic types are more desirable. Is the insulation covering the furnace in good repair (1)? If it is a coal burner, open the door (2) and look over the interior with a flashlight to make sure the fuel pot is not burned out, and that the grates are not warped. If you suspect poor joints between sections of the fire pot, or that it may be burned out, burn something in the furnace with a sharp odor, like tar paper. If there is a leak into the air jacket, you can notice the odor upstairs. Look at the heat ducts: if one is turned off (8), it may mean the plant is insufficient, and one room is not heated in the winter. The pipe from the furnace to the chimney (7) also will give a clue: if it is flaked or blistered it means the furnace is too small, and is operated at an inefficient overload. Here's your chance to check the sou ness of the chimney, too: Stick y knife into the mortar. If it cr bles, remember that chimney pairs are expensive. Notice the chimney passes through floor overhead: it should be bo by the framing (6), and have inches clearance from the wo There should be a cleanout doo the bottom of the chimney (4)

Is the exposed framing strong?

NOW for the structure. The joists should be at least two inches thick, the depth depending on the span, spaced 16 inches apart from their centers (1), or closer on spans over 14 feet. They should be eight inches deep for spans of 10 feet or less, 10 inches for spans up to 12 feet, and 12 inches for spans up to 14 feet. The joists are supported by a foundation wall at one end, a girder at the other. Where they are supported, the length of bearing (2) should be at least three inches. Joists will be weaker if cut out where they meet the sill. Where joists are spliced, they should have a generous overlap, and be spliced only over a support (3). Too many knots can seriously weaken the joists.

The joists should be bridged in the center of each span (4). The bridging consists of pieces of 1x2 crossed between the joists, to distribute loads among several joists, and to keep them perpendicular—a position in which they can take the most strain. Bridging also can be made of solid pieces of two-inch board nailed between the joists.

Holes often are cut in joists to accommodate plumbing and wiring (5). Preferably, such holes should be near the ends of the joists, and they should be closer to the top, rather than the bottom, edges of the joists.

Joists should be doubled below upper-floor partitions and around openings, such as for stairs (6). Girders (7) are large beams which support the inner ends of the joists. They often are made up of narrower boards spiked together, and are supported by posts. The support posts (8)—usually 6x6- or 8x8-inch timbers or lally columns (concrete-filled steel pipes)—should rest on concrete footings (9) raised above the basement floor as protection from water. Check the entire structure for sag.

Above the joists, there should be a subfloor (10). Flooring laid diagonally is the strongest. Unless of tongued and grooved construction, ends of the subfloor boards should rest on joists. Building paper should separate the sub- and finish floors.

How does the plumbing look?

WHILE you're looking up, check the exposed plumbing. Rust or corrosion (1 sketch page 120) may make you question the condition of plumbing in the rest of the house. Find out from the owner where the water comes from—whether from a municipal line, or from a well. If it comes from a well, you should have the water analyzed by the public health officer or a private chemist. Find out, too, whether the sewage discharges into the municipal sewer, a cesspool, or septic tank. Cesspools are seldom built now, and generally are not as safe as septic tanks. If a septic tank is used, check on the adequacy and location of the disposal field. If you have to connect your home to the city sewage system later, it will cost you money. Plumbing pipes within the house should be equipped with cleanout plugs (2). Make sure the house has an automatic water heater large enough for your family. Daily consumption will be between 10 and 15 gallons a day per person. The storage tank should hold at least 20 percent of your family's daily needs (3). Inspect the place where plumbing waste pipes leave the basement—there should be a watertight seal (4).

Plumbing fixtures, incidentally, provide a clue to the age of the house—and beware cracked fixtures. Cleanout plugs on the bottom of traps are a sign of recent installation. If plumbing makes a noise like water gurgling from a bottle, it is improperly vented. Drainage should be quick and quiet. If it's slow, the pipes may be clogged or too small. Check the pressure on the upstairs bath by turning on all the faucets in the house. Low pressure upstairs may mean pipes choked by mineral deposit or rust, that the city service pressure is insufficient, or that the service line to the house is too small (it should be not less than one inch in diameter).

Examine the wiring. If it's of the knob and tube type, you can readily detect patched-on circuits and new splices; if there are many, circuits probably are loaded yond their capacities. Feel a near a light fixture (5): if it is flexible, its sheathing has age the point where it may easily c —it may have to be replaced. L at the fuse box (6). You may fi penny behind a fuse—a cer sign the circuit is overloa Throughout the house, make there are three-way switches w there should be—at the top bottom of stairs (7) for instanc at entrances to living rooms.

Look for outlets, test the floor

NOW you're ready to go to the floor above, the kitchen first. Check the electrical outlets—if you have an electric range you must have a power service entrance (1). You'll need other outlets for the refrigerator and appliances. And if your stove or refrigerator uses gas, you'll need connections for it as well (2).

Check the floor. A feeling of unevenness as you drag your foot across linoleum indicates curled board edges or cracks in the flooring beneath. Look under the sink —is the floor sound, or rotted by water (3)?

Here, and in the living areas, walk heavily across the center of the floor—does the floor feel solid, or springy? If it is springy, the framing beneath is insufficient. If only short lengths of finished flooring were used, it means the builder saved some money by using the cheaper type of material. Does floor slope off to a low corner? D it squeak?

Look at the walls. If they ar plaster, check them for cra Cracks starting at the upper c ners of window or door openi and angling out (4) are an indi tion of structural weakness. R and lower a window (if doul hung) to see that it is free.

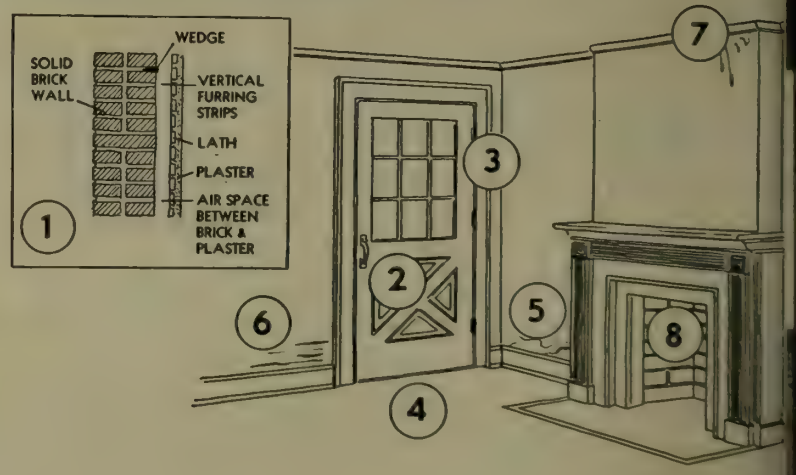
What do the doors, windows show?



CHECK the condition of the windows' pulleys and cords (1); make sure the sash hasn't started rotting from exposure to weather with insufficient paint protection. Notice whether there are locks and window lifts (2)—they're sometimes left off for economy. Check also for weatherstripping on windows and doors (3).

Is there a border of dust marks around the window trim (4)? That means the wind is coming in, and you'll have a big fuel bill. Are there watermarks under windows? If so, rain may have entered.

Look at the trim or woodwork around doors and windows, a sill, baseboard, molding, paneling. The joints should tight—if they're not (5), they made by an unskilled carpe Also, the type of wood will pro a key to the amount of money went into the house. Hardw will wear better, but is more pensive. Look for knots, cra and pitch pockets (6). A gap tween the baseboard and floo usually means the wood was g when laid down, or that the has settled. If the gap conti under the door casing (8) the has probably settled.

Thump a wall, slam a door

IF THE wall is of solid brick, pound on it with your hand to determine whether plaster was applied directly to the brick—it should be furred out (1) to provide air space, which will reduce condensation.

Slam the doors. If the walls vibrate, they're not as solid as they could be. A good wall will absorb most of the shock without vibration. Make sure the catches and locks work, and examine all the hardware (2). Heavy exterior doors and those with full-length mirrors should have three hinges (3); that number is desirable for all doors for best support.

Door sills (4) should be of oak or metal; worn sills are another to the age of the house.

If there are watermarks on wall you can't account for (may be that insulation was ap without a proper vapor seal (w proof membrane, like impregn paper, on the room side of th sulation). The attic's worth a visit, too

AN unfinished attic provides an excellent place to check on the house structure. Rafters, like studs and joists, should be spaced 16 inches apart at the center (1). Examine the joints where the rafters meet the ridge (2)—they indicate the skill of the mechanic who put them in place. Collar ties (3)—horizontal 2x4's that join rafters below the ridge—lend strength to the roof structure. Rafters should be straight and sound, and firmly seated. There should be incombustible material between the rafters at the top plate (4) as fire protection. Above the rafters will be the roof sheathing (5), (tongue-and-grooved boards that serve as a base for the roofing material) or nailing strips (6), to which shingles are fastened. What do you do about young love?

Begins on pag

Marvins and Jeannies everywhere, must recognize it and guide it. Whether it comes at 12 or 20, we must look upon our own children's love affair as some of our business. We must be prepared for it and we must guide it—if possible—without the lovers realizing it.

The worst mistake we can make is to be openly amused at them, subjecting them to ridicule. Next worst, perhaps, is to become angry and issue lofty do-not commands. Sweethearting is poignant. It is a declaration of personal independence, a first real hint that our ownership of the child is approaching its end. If we buck it we will surely drive the child to immediate rebellion. If we aid it and guide it, we can build a mature family bond that will exalt all parties for life.

Mother Wilson had the good sense not to laugh or be indignant when young Marvin asked for that first date.

"The truth is," she confessed, "I was too astonished to say anything. But I saw the new awareness in Marvin's eyes. And I heard the new assurance in Jeannie's voice. When they walked out together to discuss what movie, I could only murmur 'Oh dear!' "

It is truly an "Oh dear" s tion. For neither you nor I ca much about it. If by the time youngsters are 13 or 14 we hav prepared them for romance, can't suddenly prepare them w the swain goes knocking at maiden's door.

Mom was purring beautifully now. "And it would be nice to have some cookies and lemonade ready. It's fun; it's the way girls do."

"Oh, Mommie!" Judy gasped in ecstasy.

"Just open the door and say 'Come in, Charles. I'm ready, but I made some lemonade. Let's sample it before we go. Shall we?' He'll like that, you can be sure, Judy. And remember, you do most of the talking, dear. Don't chatter; but ask him little questions, offer him more lemonade, suggest that it's time to start, all the little things. We women have to learn to carry the burden of entertaining our men until they feel at ease with us."

Beds with extra storage

Studio-sized bed in a trim cover doubles as a sofa by day. Ready-made bolsters lined across the back narrow the bed to regular sofa width. Then at night, the bed is easily made up

Top and bottom sections of the bed above swing up so you can store blankets and linens in the box base. Breaks in the three-part mattress occur at knee and shoulder level where you'll hardly notice them

Cedar chest-bed combination adds bedroom storage without stealing space. Only handles on the foot of the bed suggest the bed has another function. Chest-bed comes in silver-gray oak, limed oak, or walnut in both single and double beds

Cedar chest slides out from the foot of the bed like a drawer. Special ready-made springs (16 inches shorter than most) leave space under the bed for the cedar chest. Since the bed has a full-length innerspring mattress, you won't miss the extra inches of spring length at the foot of bed

A permanent strawberry bed

By F. E. Potter

Don't leave strawberries out of your garden just because you've been told a bed must be moved and replanted every two years. Here's an idea for a permanent bed that will continue to give abundant berries. Prepare soil as for any strawberry bed. Plant everbearers 18 inches apart in rows, with 30 inches between rows. Pick off all blossoms until July to let plants gain strength. Then follow steps below. Diagrams, of course, show only part of bed.

First year. When runners appear, root one from each plant to start a second row 10 inches away as shown. Pick off all other runners and keep blossoms removed from Row 2 all season. By late summer you can pick berries from first row.

Second year. The next spring, start a third row with runners from Row 2, and keep it picked clean of blossoms as before. The first and second rows are now bearing all season. In the fall dig up Row 1, discard plants, and thoroughly fertilize.

Third year. The following spring, use runners from Row 3 to start row to fill space where Row 1 had been. In the fall, of course, Row 2 will be dug up. Repeat the process each year digging up the oldest rows in the fall, fertilizing the soil, and then rooting new plants in empty space the following spring. Root a few extra plants to replace any that die.

WOVEN ON POWER LOOMS IN THE U. S. A. • A. & M. KARAGHEUSIAN, INC., FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK

BEFORE Well-built unfinished furniture like this chest is becoming more and more available. Look for smooth, knot-free wood. Make sure the joints are tight and that the drawers slide easily

AFTER With finish on, the wood has become a warm, rich walnut. The grain is subdued, and successive coats of clear lacquer build up to a durable, low-toned gloss rather than a sharp shine. The brown stains work best on pine; avoid red stains like mahogany. You should do your finishing job in a dust-free, well-ventilated room with the temperature kept at 70 degrees or above

Buy it unfinished

Yes, you can stain unfinished furniture. Here is how to reach a durable, handsome finish

By John Webster

If you have an eye on your budget most of the time, low-cost unfinished furniture may solve many of your furnishings problems.

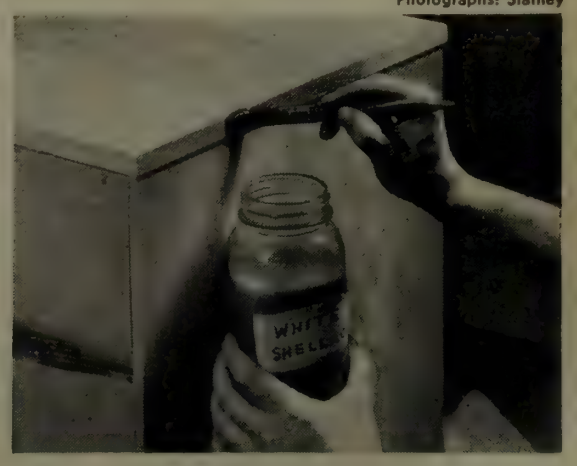
But every piece of unfinished furniture you buy brings you up against this immediate question—how should it be finished?

You can paint it, of course, using enamel undercoat followed by two coats of quick-drying enamel. Or you can get a natural blonde finish with varnish and wax.

But what if you prefer a stained finish, or want to match the piece to other furniture? Changing the color of soft white pine without hiding the grain can be difficult, for the wood is inclined to soak up the stain rapidly and unevenly. But it can be done.

The secret lies in using a slow-drying pigment oil stain. Don't use penetrating stain; it strikes in too rapidly and is difficult to control. Water stain raises the grain and makes extra sanding necessary. Spirit stain evaporates too rapidly for easy use.

The stain-finish technique shown in the photographs is almost foolproof. If you have access to spray-gun equipment, or even a vacuum cleaner attachment, you can get a smoother lacquer coat. As an alternate final finish, easier to apply but somewhat less durable, you could use three coats of flat or semi-gloss varnish.



Photographs: Stanley

Removing mars. Dents and mars must be smoothed, for staining accents defects. Shallow dents often can be raised with a damp cloth and a hot iron. Hide deep mars with wood filler. Add lacquer thinner to filler, and it will take stain. Glue splinters down

Sanding. Before any finish is applied, sand with the grain, using 3-0 sandpaper on a padded block. Round corners slightly; finish won't stick if they're sharp. Remove greasy finger marks and glue drops, or spots will show. Dust with a turpentine cloth

Sealing end-grain. Exposed end-grain is absorbent. Unless you seal it, stain will strike in until edge is black. Seal with a thin coat of white shellac, brushed on before stain is applied. If shellac laps onto side grain, sand it off as soon as it is dry

Applying stain. On pine, you'll get best results with pigment oil stain, wiped on with a cloth. To lighten color, wipe over it at once with second cloth. Stain gets lighter as it dries. Test stain on hidden place; if it is too dark after drying 24 hours you can lighten the liquid stain by adding boiled linseed oil

Sealing surface. After stain has dried 24 hours, seal pores in wood with white shellac or lacquer seal. If you use shellac, thin it down 50-50 with alcohol, and flow it on carefully with a brush. When the shellac is dry, smooth it by rubbing down with 3-0 steel wool, and dust with a turpentine-soaked cloth

Applying lacquer. Finish with three coats of clear, brush-type lacquer. Lacquer dries very rapidly. Flow it on, brushing with the grain, and don't try to brush back over it. Watch for runs, smoothing them out lightly before they set. Between coats and after final coat, rub carefully with 3-0 steel wool, and dust not sprayed again until the ssom petals have fallen, after bees have gone. They are aved once later to control cod- moth and red spider.

ome of the big greenhouses, rticularly the big rose ranges h hundreds of thousands of are feet of glass, are equally im- ssive. They all look good, and athion fumigation with aerosol nbs is almost universal.

ow can any one insecticide do h a complete job on insects? v does it kill both sucking and wing insects, when other ma- ils won't?

Here is the secret of parathion. It hree insecticides rolled into one. kills by fumigation. It kills by tact. It kills as a stomach ison. The cleanout is complete. gs, pre-moult young, adults. erything goes. Though it has ost no residual effect like DDT, ng weeks after application, it es no "seed" insects to reinfest greenhouse, orchard, or gar- n. Not until a new flight or mi- tion reinfests the area will in- s reappear. It has "reach" so t not only the insects that actu- touch it die—it destroys those where near the area sprayed.

DDT stored in your fat?

Unlike DDT, parathion ap- parently does not accumulate in the soil nor in one's body fat. DDT is strange that way. Used repeatedly in an orchard or gar- den and turned under along with the plant residues, it remains there, insoluble, without chang- ing form. If enough accumulates, as experiments indicate it well may after 8 or 10 years, it can stunt plant growth. Its accumu- lation in body fat is even stranger. If a cow eats feeds on which DDT residue remains, the DDT is given off in the butter- fat in her milk (you can make a good fly spray of it). If a hog eats such feeds, the DDT is stored in the hog's fat. Then if you drink the milk or eat the pork, the DDT is stored in your fat. What happens from there on is unknown. DDT-fed rats have stored three times the killing dose of DDT in their fat, with- out harm. But suppose, because of diet or illness, you begin to consume this stored fat, releas- ing the poison into your blood stream—what then?

Parathion doesn't pose that threat.

It is all but impossible to rate an secticide in direct comparison th another. Parathion has been lled "a hundred times more werful than DDT." In some ys, this is true. In others, per- haps 10 times would be closer to the truth. In still others, like long-lasting effect, parathion can't compare. This is both an advan- tage and a disadvantage. It is this long-lasting effect that has made DDT so dangerous to pollinating insects and such a threat on foods to be eaten by man. It is this long- lasting effect that made DDT so effective in wartime against mos- quitoes and lice and filth, and has made it so effective as a household insecticide against flies and fleas and big bugs and moths.

But what of insects that aren't touched by DDT—redspider-mite and aphids, for example—but are destroyed utterly by parathion? Does this give us a rating of infin- ity? If we must make a comparison, let's put it this way: I know of no single insect which can be killed better with DDT than with para- thion, and the reverse is true of most economic insects.

In less than two years, used as a dust, a spray, and an aerosol, para- thion became the most important insecticide in commerce, at least in the number of uses found for it. Although rather high in cost, it is being given preference for many uses where older insecticides have proved ineffective. Orchard opera- tors, disgusted with the failure of DDT to control mites, have wel- comed it with open arms.

But keep its record straight. It isn't quite a universal insecticide. It has failed on cyclamen mite, sometimes a pest on outdoor flow- ers like delphinium. It has no effect on the hard forms of scale, though it will kill the soft young form of the same species. Pill bugs or sow bugs seem to be able to roll up and shut out its toxic effects. I have also heard reports that the cotton boll weevil is not harmed by it. Except for these few, however, I have not heard of any other eco- nomic insects it will not kill. Its poisoning action seems to be much like that of the nerve-destroying DDT. It gives them the same death jitters.

Against the flies that resist DDT, widely reported in the press lately, it seems fully effective.

There has been much talk this spring that the department of agri- culture would release parathion for use in home gardens. Maybe. There's a lot about it that isn't yet known. Possibly it will never be released. There is ample cause for caution. Obviously, any ma- terial so deadly to insects must have some harmful effect on warm- blooded animals as well.

The cautions on the commercial packages alone would be enough to scare off most gardeners for life. Men applying parathion indoors look like visitors from Mars, with long rubber coats, rubber capes that cover the neck and head, and their faces covered with Mine Standards masks. They usually walk under a shower and wash off every vestige of the spray before touching their rubber clothing.

The Celotex Dealers and Builders of America join with The Celotex Corporation to bring you the THREE-KEY PLAN to

Attractive, Modern Homes for Modest Budgets

YOUR FAMILY still on the waiting list for a new home, despite the hundreds of usands that have been built to meet the atest demand in our nation's history? Have you, like millions of other Amer-s, been wondering how you can build home you need now, at a price within r means?

Even though yours be a modest income, need no longer put up with the dis-fort and inconvenience of inadequate ng quarters for your loved ones.

We of The Celotex Corporation have focused our full attention on the problem of how livable, lasting homes could be brought within the reach of families of modest means. We studied this problem in the light of our 25 years of experience in reducing building costs through increasing building efficiency. We consulted many outstanding architects and builders, analyzed hundreds of house plans.

Regardless of what you may previously have heard or read on the subject, we state that even today, when everything costs more, it is possible for the family of moderate income to build a comfortable, beautiful, enduring home at a sensible price. And we offer the following sound, simple Three-Key Plan as a guide.

SOME FAMOUS CELOTEX MATERIALS TO M

Celotex Insulating Sheathing—Asphalt coated for greater moisture protection, it combines greater structural strength and better insulation, too—three vital functions at one low cost!

Celotex Insulating Lath—Make perior base for plaster—builc insulates, at the same time, pe both of these important jobs at one low cost!

Celotex Presents the Three-Key Plan

Key Number One opens the way to the right design at the right price

We asked a group of America's most skillful, practical architects to design a series of quality homes at common-sense cost. They were given free rein with just one important restriction: These homes must embody the proven basic principles of efficiency and economy in design and construction.

Through such advancements as improved planning that saves building time and work . . . use of Celotex quality materials that perform two or more functions at a single cost . . . use of standard framework and millwork sizes, these homes assure you that none of your money will go into needless frills or extravagances. They give you assurance that you can start right now to build a substantial, beautiful home that you will cherish all through life at a price within the means of an average family.

Key Number Two opens the way to the right materials at the right price

Top quality building materials are again available, and in ample quantities. To make sure you get the best for your money, there is no more important man to see in your community than your Celotex dealer. He can tell you exactly how to go about building the beautiful home pictured here, or several others designed for Celotex in a variety of price ranges, or still others in his own collection of moderate priced homes. He can give you a complete estimate of their cost and put you in touch with a reliable architect and builder.

He has a keen awareness of what's new and better in building methods and products. This man is more than just a lumber merchant today—he is the man who knows your local conditions, costs, laws, building codes. And he can tell you how to make arrangements for financing your home, too. He is the man to consult—the man in whom to place your confidence.

Key Number Three opens the way to beautiful modern interiors

To give the Celotex Three-Key Plan added interest to the homemaker, we have retained Helen Koues, nationally famous decorator, founder and for many years the director of Good Housekeeping Magazine's Studio of Architecture, Building and Furnishing. She shows with simple sketches how the interiors of these homes can be created. She has provided arrangements and color scheme suggestions of modern charm and good taste, planned with efficiency and economy uppermost in mind.

This home was designed by Architect Earl G. Nelson for The Celotex Corporation. One of a series of beautiful, enduring homes that can be built now at common-sense cost by families with average income.

YOU ALWAYS BUILD BETTER WITH CELOTEX BUILDING PRODUCTS

Your dealer knows there is no substitute for genuine Celotex quality. Only Celotex, for example, has the exclusive patented Ferox process. This makes Celotex cane fibre products proof against dry rot, termites or fungus. As a result, building experts who have examined Celotex materials used in homes over 25 years ago find them still as sound and strong as ever, still saving home owners money and trouble.

Remember—more homes are built with Celotex than with any other rigid insulation materials in the world. Whether you are building or remodeling—be satisfied with nothing less than genuine Celotex quality.

ADD ANOTHER BEDROOM TO YOUR PRESENT HOME THIS EASY, LOW-COST WAY

Need an extra bedroom? Get it simply by remodeling that unused attic into a charming, comfortable room that anyone would love to call his or her own. It's quick, easy, and inexpensive to do with Celotex Insulating Interior Finishes. These come in Building Board, Tile Board, or Finish Plank form, permitting a variety of design treatments for walls and ceilings. They build for strength, insulate for comfort, decorate for beauty—all at one time, at one low cost! They are ideal for turning unused attic or basement space into a bedroom, rumpus room, or extra room of any sort. Renew that bathroom yourself

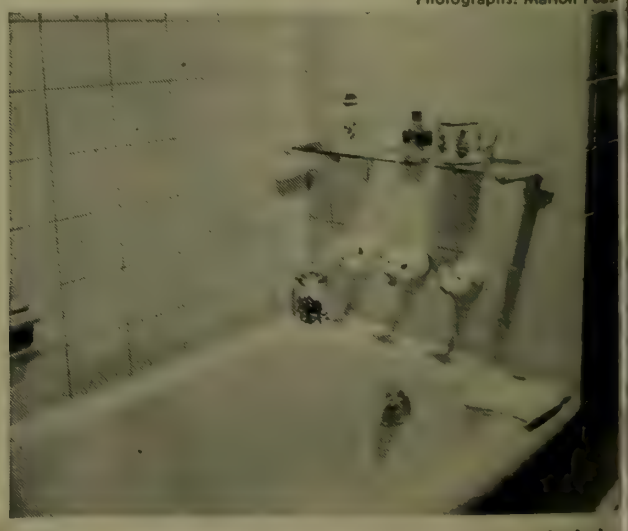
. . . and make it gleam with new life and beauty

Cover up those plaster cracks—and put new lif into your bathroom walls with enamel-finish tile Tiles have rough backs that you can cement to an surface. Here we show you how tiles worked in th bathroom of one family who used them.

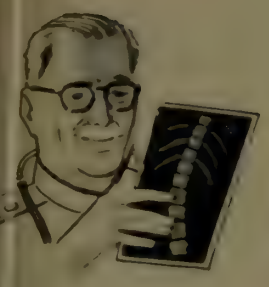
By Mary Allen Fagen

BEFORE Though our bathroom was well arranged as small bathrooms go, it looked bare and cold. It needed brightening up, so we decided to get wall tiles with baked-on enamel finish



AFTER Sparkling-white tile on the walls and floral wallpaper on the ceiling and above the dado (those floral curtains match) made a big difference. A new washbowl and a new medicine chest were put in to take less space than the old ones did. I made the lamp shades and wastebasket cover out of scraps of new wallpaper

Photographs: Marion Pea



BEFORE Our plaster walls were beginning to chip and crack. Frequent refilling and painting never seemed to help. We needed to have the walls around the bathtub, especially where there was a lot of moisture and heat, covered with something that would look good permanently

AFTER Tiles went on right over the plaster and hid the cracks. The baked-on finish won't crack, craze, or peel, so I can keep the tile walls clean with a whisk of a damp cloth. Soap dishes and towel racks and glass shelf are new, too. Cost for everything done in the bathroom: $160

Revolutionary New Sleeping Comfort!

Serta questioned hundreds of orthopedic doctors, took x-ray photos and stroboscopic action pictures. Here are the facts:

You Sleep ON It — Not IN It!

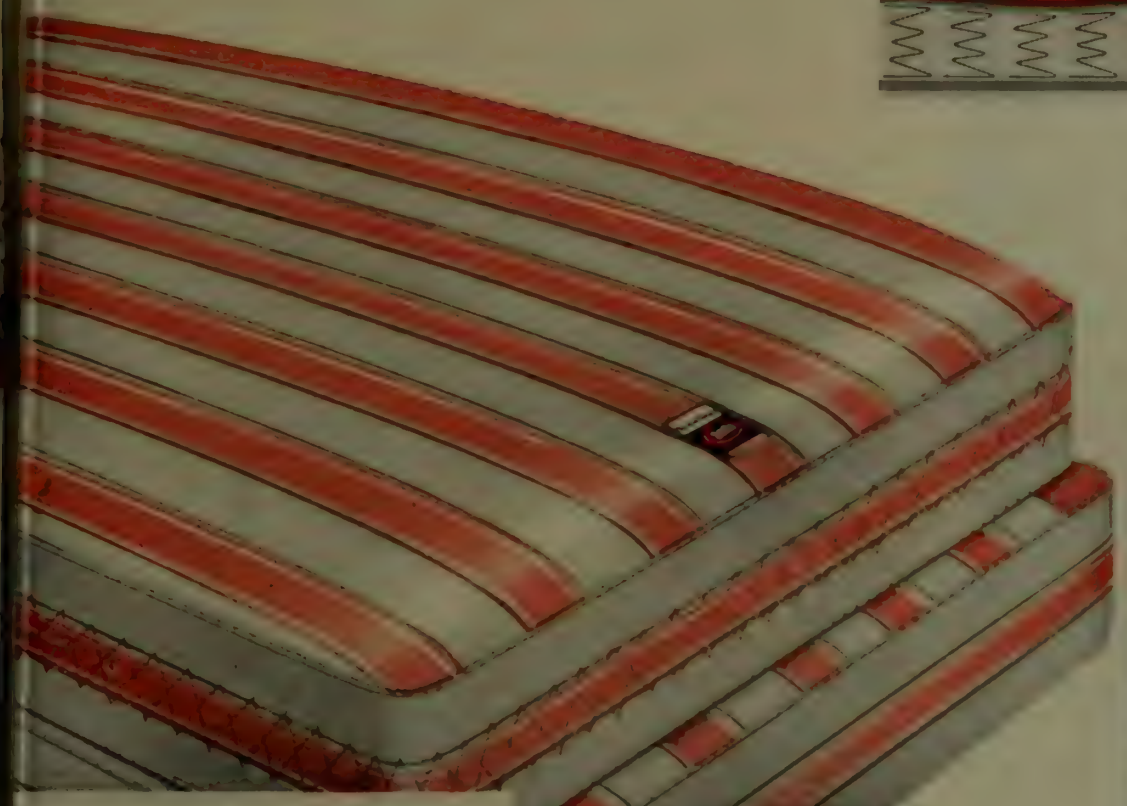

Fig. 1—X-ray photo shows a normal person lying on the "Perfect Sleeper" Mattress—built to specifications approved by orthopedic specialists. Notice the spine is given level, even support. This makes complete relaxation possible . . . permits more restful sleep.

Fig. 2—Same sleeper on common type of soft mattress with many individually covered coils. Notice body sinking into mattress. Doctors say this often causes muscle strain and backache. "Form fitting" springs also confine body heat, causing restless sleep.

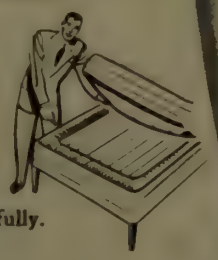
Fig. 1—Laboratory photos show that bowling ball dropped on a "Perfect Sleeper" bounces high! This proves the extra springy resiliency of this mattress which combines with healthful support to give complete sleeping comfort.

Fig. 2—Same test made on a common type of soft mattress with many individually covered coils. Note the low bounce of the bowling ball on this mattress — as compared with the high bounce produced by the "Perfect Sleeper."

Exclusive Serta Features

. . . the secret of this wonderful comfort

"Uni-Matic" Spring Top—Steelbands lengthwise across top and bottom of innerspring unit weave coils into one big, resilient cushion ...provide healthful, more restful "all-over" support.



FLAT...NOT ROUND

Reinforced Center Panel—Patented "Ribbon Steel" coils in center section of mattress give far greater "live" resiliency where you need it most—more relaxing, more satisfying!

For Every Size or Weight—The "Perfect Sleeper" adjusts automatically to your individual comfort needs.

"Perfect Sleeper" Box Spring—with scientifically improved raised edge construction gives ideal support and protection to the mattress, completes your healthful sleeping comfort. Dustless, noiseless—dresses your bed more beautifully.

"It's What's Under the Casing that Counts"

"Prewar" fire insurance won't protect you!

It's good as far as it goes, but unless you've increased it to keep pace with the rising value of your property, you may find yourself holding a part of the bag

By Ray Giles

Most homeowners haven't the fire-insurance protection they really want and can't afford not to have. Your own insurance adviser can tell you—if you'll listen—about homes all around you which are grossly underinsured against damage or total destruction. Even less are these residences properly insured against other hazards which every day grow more common.

"The almost universal practice," says James R. Gregory of the insurance magazine, Rough Notes, "is to carry just enough fire insurance to equal the mortgage on the property—no more! Or the homeowner takes, say, $5,000 insurance on a $15,000 home and counts on his local fire department to save him from a total loss."

Meanwhile, replacement costs of both homes and their contents have more than doubled in eight short years. The annual fire loss has soared to an all-time high of $700,000,000. In a typical year, fire strikes 1 home in every 100. And other risks have arisen, many of which were either negligible or nonexistent a few years ago. Unless you're protected against them, you're really carrying only horse-and-buggy insurance!

Consider the loss you might suffer if an airplane crashed through your roof. If no fire occurred, your pure fire policy couldn't pay for damage like that. Nor can it pay if a runaway automobile shears off your porch or crashes through a wall. If your furnace gets out of order and smudges up your home, damaging walls, furnishings, and furniture, you're out of luck unless you have extended coverage added to your fire insurance.

In many communities new industries have sharply increased still other hazards during the last 10 years. When an explosion wrecks a home without an accompanying fire loss, up-to-the-minute insurance is a lifesaver. When Texas city rocked on its heels from the blast of 1947, 3,978 claims for nearly $4,000,000 were paid to restore buckled-in walls and roofs caused by concussion.

That year of 1947, incidentally, was a tough one for underinsured homeowners throughout the nation.

In Maine, forest fires demolished hundreds of seriously underinsured homes. When I visited there last summer, I saw tiny houses rising on lots once occupied by larger, more handsome residences.

In Florida and the Gulf States, the hurricanes of 1947 flattened many homes either inadequately or totally unprotected against the loss. Devastating winds in 35 states caused 48,000 losses totaling $30,000,000, but only 55 percent of this amount could be recovered because of horse-and-buggy insurance. [Turn to page 148

What does straight fire insurance cover?

Fire, of course, and any water, smoke, or other damage incidental to extinguishing the blaze. The only non-fire loss it includes in most states is damage by lightning. In some states outbuildings—garages, greenhouses, playhouses—and even fences must be listed and their values specified if you want to be sure of recovering their loss.

Take fences. A neighbor of mine, burning leaves, was called indoors to answer the phone. When he returned, a gust of wind had thrown fire against his handsome picket fence. The fire burned down $200 worth of it. But he couldn't recover because his insurance covered only his house.

Even more unfortunate was the fire that turned Harry W.'s two-story garage into a flat, black smudge. With a two-room apartment and bath on the second floor, the garage was worth about one-fifth as much as the main house. But Harry's fire policy specified that the value of outbuildings could not exceed 10 percent of the policy, so he got only about half enough to rebuild them.

So, at the risk of boring you, let me repeat what has so often been said: Read your policy! Try reading it aloud to your wife or to yourself and you'll find that you really can understand nearly all of it. Whenever you get tangled in legalisms, mark an X beside that section, and make your insurance man tell you just what it means.

In some areas, notably in and around Chicago and New York City, a co-insurance clause exists. This is too complicated a provision to explain here, but if you find it, make your insurance agent explain just what recovery you could expect if your fire loss were $500, $200, or total.

What is "extended coverage"?

Because mere fire insurance doesn't begin to handle all the dangers you face in a complicated modern world, the fire-insurance companies, about 10 years ago, created what is called extended coverage. When this rider is pasted to your fire policy, you're protected against loss resulting from damage by hail, windstorm, cyclone, tornado, rioting, strikes, smoke and smudge, civil commotion, vehicle damage, and falling aircraft and parts thereof. This extra coverage costs less than your regular fire premium.

If some of these dangers sound too remote for words, remember the big blows in New England. So indifferent were New Englanders to the likelihood of property damage from violent wind that the hurricane of 1938 found less than 5 percent of the half-billion dollar loss recoverable under insurance. The recovery was much greater when, again in 1944, a second storm resulted in widespread destruction.

What else can you insure against?

After adding extended coverage to your fire-insurance policy, there are still other risks to consider. You may prefer to place some of them on the broad back of an insurance company instead of shouldering them yourself.

Have you a beautiful lawn and handsome trees and shrubbery? Your residential fire insurance doesn't cover them. But a separate policy will reimburse you if they're burned.

Since rain and melting snow entering through defective roofs and windows can wreck plaster, wallpaper, and furnishings, you may want water damage insurance. It pays for the losses mentioned and any others caused by leaking plumbing, refrigerators, heating plants, or other equipment which can unexpectedly drip.

The rental value clause is another recent innovation which can be mighty comforting if your home becomes uninhabitable. It's paying rent for every day for families while their homes are being rebuilt. But wait a minute! How many homes are for rent in your community? None, perhaps?

For this reason, additional living expense insurance is being taken by more and more homeowners—especially those with large families. With it, if disaster makes your residence uninhabitable, your hotel and restaurant bills will be paid in full until you can go home again.

Want to discover that you're much richer than you thought you were? Here are two experiments you might make.

1. Imagine that fire has destroyed everything in your living room. Stepping into another room write down, from memory, the cost and replacement price of everything burned. Then compare your estimate with reality. Unless you've an encyclopedic memory, you may discover that you're underinsured by hundreds of dollars in that one room alone!

2. From memory, estimate replacement values of all clothing owned by the family. Then go from closet to drawer to the clothing on your back and add it up. Here again you'll be in for a rude awakening when you compare what you are able to remember with what you actually have.

To keep rates low, insurance companies must discourage fraudulent claims. That's why your household-contents fire-insurance policy requires you, in case of loss, to furnish a complete inventory of the destroyed and damaged articles and show in detail their actual cash value. If fire struck, could you? With an inventory book, yes!

In this record list every item to be insured together with its cost and present value. When you replace any expensive worn-out article like a rug or a winter coat with a new one, record that, too. If you acquire valuable new posses-

This protects you against both er- and underinsurance. It will, ase of loss, provide immediate sfaction to the insurance com- ny and assure prompt settle- t.

Remember that cash, valuable ers, and sentimental values n't insurable. So don't insure old painting by Uncle Harry $200 when it wouldn't fetch a dollar on the open market. Valuable antiques, furs, jewelry, and paintings are better insured, in most cases, when covered by a separate policy which describes each and specifies its value. If you have expensive hobby equipment that's used away from home, your best bet may be a personal property floater policy. It covers all kinds of damage and loss in any spot on earth.

Yes; insuring your home and its contents against damage or destruction is a complicated business. And it's highly personal, because values fluctuate from year to year. But good advice is free as the air, so seek it. You may rightly decide that you can't insure in full against every risk, but sound planning will protect you against the likeliest ones. It may even reduce your premiums or add protection without adding to what you've been paying all along.

here is a general misconception t the forming infant leads a mped life, that it is folded tight- within the uterus. This is not e. Its heartbeat is detectable by ordinary clini- means such as the stethescope. lier, the faint beat could be rd only with elaborate ampli- rs. In this connection, let's aighten out another common sconception. There is a wide- ad, and erroneous, belief that rts of girl babies beat more dly than those of boys—and the physician can thereby tell sex of the unborn child with tethescope. There is no clinical port whatsoever for this belief.

now, the baby is an alto- her remarkable individual. The inal single cell has grown to a nt where the new life now has its full lifetime complement of nerve cells—a staggering total of 12 billion of them!

By the seventh month, the baby is complete enough to stand a good chance of survival if born prematurely. An old wives' tale states that a seven-months baby has a better chance of survival than an eight-months baby. This isn't true. The longer a baby stays within its mother, the better its chances for life. In a sense, the eighth and ninth months are nature's safety factors. The child has a chance if born before, but it has a far better chance if given these two months in the womb to grow sturdier and stronger.

During this period, the placenta has assumed other tasks besides those of nourishing the baby and disposing of wastes. It has also become a gland of internal secretion. It would be impossible for the ovaries to secrete enough progesterone to keep the enormously enlarged uterus quiet, to keep it from contracting and expelling the fetus. Hence, the placenta starts manufacturing progesterone. The placenta also starts making estrogen, another ovarian hormone, which is needed to stimulate tissue-building in the uterus. Evidence now arrives that there is a third female sex hormone—one called relaxin. Its job is what its name implies: to relax tendons and tissues in the pelvic area to facilitate birth.

In its final stages of development, the baby takes the first steps toward acquiring a personality. He swallows and even makes breathing motions with his chest. He may even be subject to hiccups, or take up thumb-sucking. One physician reported an infant born with a sore and reddish thumb. While the doctor was examining it, the infant pulled it away, popped it into his mouth.

The forming baby reacts to external environment. If its mother smokes a cigarette, it derives enough nicotine from her blood to speed up its heart. This, however, seems to do little or no harm. Some sounds apparently cause irritation—or at least excitement—to the baby. Research men have found that certain sounds from tuning forks cause rapid movement of the baby's arms and legs.

While living its nesting existence, the baby is the world's supreme egotist. It is an utterly selfish sprout of life, interested only in its own well-being. Without regard for his mother's welfare, he draws on her for essential proteins with which to build tissue. He burdens her kidneys with his own wastes; pushes her organs aside to make room for himself. To build a blood supply of his own, he draws heavily on her reserve of iron—possibly producing anemia in her while remaining robustly healthy himself.

He robs her teeth of calcium to build bones for himself, and takes glycogen—a starchy stuff that provides energy—from her liver. He helps himself to whatever he wants. Yet, as always, there is a pattern and a wisdom here. Only by such selfishness can the baby insure his own survival. The mother can seek help from a hundred or a thousand people. The baby is completely dependent on one. Thus, the baby prepares himself for the supreme moment of his life: his birth.

Once again, the mother's body has undergone elaborate preparations for the event. Nothing has been forgotten in the whole, vastly complex procedure. The placenta has generated enough surplus hormones to prepare the breasts for their waiting job. The breasts contain a treelike structure of milk ducts, the nipples representing the trunks. Under pressure of increased hormone production, these tree structures become enormously enlarged—shooting out thousands of new branches and twigs.

Everything is in readiness to provide food for the new life. Actual milk production, however, won't start until the pituitary gland at the base of the mother's brain gives the word. A few hours after birth, it gives this word. It starts producing minute amounts of the hormone, prolactin. This, in turn, starts the breasts functioning.

pened within the mother's body. The normally hard cervix, or mouth of the womb, through which the baby must pass, has changed in consistency. Medical students are taught that it is normally of the approximate hardness of the tip of the nose, but that during pregnancy it becomes softened like the lips. The birth canal itself has been provided with a new supply of blood vessels, and with a special lubricant to facilitate passage of the infant. Nothing has been forgotten. The moment of birth is at hand.

How does the body decide that the child is ready to be born? Physicians would dearly love to have a sure answer for this question. If they knew what triggered labor, they might find a means of stopping labor when it started too early. As things stand, there are only guesses—some of them feeble—as to how the body decides the moment has come.

One theory is that the vastly enlarged uterus has been stretched beyond its endurance. The uterus expresses itself by contracting in an effort to expel the irritant—the baby. Another theory is that the body chooses this moment to produce a mysterious chemical which inaugurates labor, but no such chemical has ever been found.

A third theory has some support in experimental evidence. Just before the birth process begins there is a dramatically sharp decline in the amounts of sex hormones circulating in the blood. It appears possible that the placenta has become senile and is no longer able to produce the hormones which have made the uterus lie quiet for nine months. In any case, this rapid decline of hormones in the blood stream is a signal that labor is about to begin. The uterus, which is made up almost entirely of muscular tissue, starts rhythmic contractions.

The head of the baby—over 95 percent of all babies are head downward at the time of birth—pushes with increasing force against the cervix. This opening, no larger than a pencil lead in nonpregnant women, must expand to four or five inches. To achieve this, relatively enormous forces are required. It has been shown, for example, that a pull of as much as 100 pounds is required for a forceps delivery.

Once again, the uterus has prepared itself for the job awaiting it. As pregnancy advanced, it grew thicker and stronger at its upper levels, adding new strands of muscle tissue. At lower levels, it grew thinner. Thus, when the moment arrived, it would be able to apply the greatest forces where they were most needed. The first pains—the first contractions of birth—usually rupture the amniotic sac.

Up to this point, nature alone has been in command of the situation—and is quite competent to finish the job. But the modern physician has demonstrated ability to complete the task less danger and less pain. He taken care to measure the p to be sure that there is enc room in this bony cradle for age of the infant's head. If the any doubt, he may take stereos ic—three dimensional—X-ray tures. Then he can see the siz the head in relation to the siz the pelvic ring.

The question of anesthesia lo large in every delivery. The p cian wants to spare the moth much pain as possible. At the s time, he does not want to drug so heavily that her muscular operation will be lost, or so the infant will be drugged he enough to endanger its life. W ing a professional tightrope, obstetrician has worked out a tricate schedule of anesthesi sample schedule would inclu barbiturate to allay pain, plus polamine to erase memory. T drugs are administered by h dermic before the mother e the delivery room.

Once on the table, with s contractions coming with inc ing regularity, the mother is g nitrous oxide (laughing gas) a with oxygen. She gets enoug this mixture to allay as much as possible without interfering contractions. In the final stag birth—when assistance of muscles is no longer needed—is given ether.

Thus, a new life comes into world—to greet the world wi cry of rage with its first lungf air. It is not a wonder that t are so many people on this e It is a wonder that there are a all. For the process which cre each man or woman is a mi almost beyond comprehensio front door. Through the back door you have access to the garden and the shaded carport-porch. The terrace is convenient to both front and back doors.

Half-partitions make the small house seem spacious. Between living room and core area is a partition, solid to a height of about 4½ feet, but open from there to the ceiling. Between core and kitchen is a wood grillwork, the openings filled with translucent glass. It provides a place for bric-a-brac, helps light the kitchen worktable, and shields the dining area from the clutter of meal preparation. That's the beauty of the plan: The house is open for ventilation and conversation, but each room is visually hidden from other rooms.

The exterior of the house is simple in line—low roofed, based on ranch design but still economically compact. Brick is used rather than siding because the narrow dimension of the house is toward the street, and brick is in better proportion to the shape of the street wall. Though the house has a full basement, the first floor is a poured concrete slab topped with asphalt tile.

Storage space is well placed. The owners' bedroom has a 10-foot-long wardrobe along one wall. The other bedroom has a large bedding and storage closet over the basement stairs in addition to the usual closet. In the kitchen there is a big closet for all cleaning equipment, large utensils, canned goods, and baskets. There's also an oversized drawer for large sacks of flour and sugar.

Our house cost us

Two years and three months

Here's the house we built—with room enough for all the family. The two older girls share one room, the baby has her own room, and there are two other bedrooms for John and me and my mother. There's space enough, also, for an indoor playroom for the children

By Pauline A. Brechbiel

In the spring of 1946 we had nearly decided to buy my mother's home, where we were living, and remodel it. Contractors changed our minds: It would have cost $5,000 at least, and we'd still have had an old house.

My husband, John, always had wanted to build his own house, and when he got out his pencil and drawing paper I knew he meant business.

We gasped when we realized the size of the house we would need for our family—six of us, including my mother and our third baby, who was expected in two months. We were further appalled at the size of our undertaking when we looked at our lot in Sparkhill, New York, after the bulldozer had done its work. All we could see was a big hole —and nothing to fill it up.

Although John is a perfectionist, and tore down everything that wasn't exactly right, the first floor's cement blocks gradually went up.

My baby was born about that time, and I soon was able to help. I stalled the electric saw and scorched the wood the first time I tried to cut a board, but it didn't take me long to learn.

The exterior of the second floor is of [Turn to page 165

John (center) is reworking the panel heating system, with the help of Ken Berry and James Thurber. Nailing the system's copper tubing in place was quite a job. Mr. Thurber, right, helped while the house was being built, and has the distinction of being the only man nearly run over by a bathtub. That happened last winter, while he was helping John install the plumbing

Having the panel heating system installed in the floor means that I don't have to worry about the children getting chilled while playing. John needed his sense of humor while putting it in, though. This is the living room method used for years by big mills _ Now sold for home use!

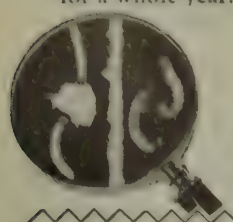
The modern, easy, SURE way to protect your precious woolens from moth damage is to actually mothproof the cloth itself with LARVEX. One easy spraying with LARVEX does the trick! It mothproofs woolens for a whole year.



LARVEX'S magic spray penetrates each tiny woolen fibre and treats the cloth so as to make it uneatable to the hungry moth worm. Tests show moths would rather commit suicide by starvation than eat anything treated with LARVEX. It gives POSITIVE protection! Simply spray the garment and hang in its usual place ready for immediate wear. Stainless. Odorless. No wrapping. No storing away. No more moth ball, cedar or camphor odors. Spray your rugs and sofas, too.

So Easy! A few minutes' spraying with LARVEX mothproofs for a whole year.

Inexpensive! It costs no more to LARVEX a suit than it does to get it dry cleaned. Only 79¢ a pint. $1.19 a quart.

TESTS SHOW PROOF—The cloth on the left has not been treated with LARVEX. Cloth on right has been treated with LARVEX. Note how moth worms refuse to eat LARVEXED cloth.

With the lathing (at which I shone) the rooms started to take shape. Last spring we had the rooms plastered. That, the wiring, and construction of two fireplaces was the only work we didn't do ourselves.

Laying the floor was like doing a jigsaw puzzle—even baby Michelle helped by handing her father nails.

John and a friend installed the panel heating, a job that tried John's sense of humor, and left him with a backache.

THE final jobs before we moved in were placing the plumbing fixtures, building the stairs and laying the tile floors. John found the stairs a mathematical nightmare, and finally had to get a friend to help him figure them.

I spent the final summer painting trim and furniture, and we're still working.

To date, the house has cost us $11,000, plus two years and three months of our time. Several contractors have told us the house would have cost at least $20,000 had we not done our own work. And at that rate, we never could have had our own home.

We planned our house so there would be a second story door opening onto the drying yard. John and I worked together on the board-and-batten exterior: I sawed, while he nailed to get more light

We shifted our porch

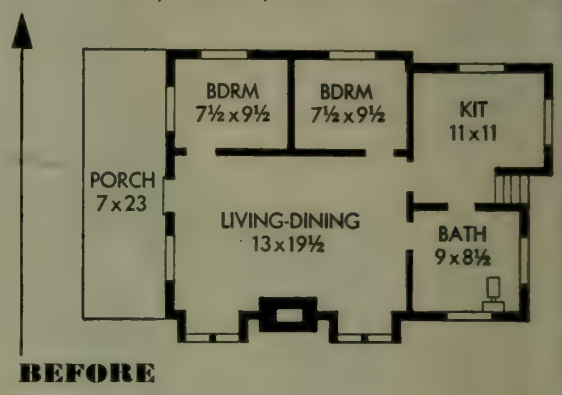
By Harold B. Wyant

Like the Hamans (page 7) we added a bay window in our living room. But unlike the Hamans, who removed their front porch, we only moved ours.

The porch was our big problem. It shut out light and obstructed the view from the living room. It reduced the cross ventilation in one bedroom. On top of that, the floor was rotting away.



Putting the porch on the south side solved everything. We still have a porch with a view and ventilation from three sides. But we also have double French doors into the living room that make the two areas seem like one. The bay window more than makes up for the light we lost when we knocked out two pairs of windows with useless window seats under them.

While we were at it (we had to dig up the materials before the contractor would take the job) we shifted the bathroom, kitchen, and second bedroom. The bath was in the sunny southeast corner, and the second bedroom in the middle of the north wall. By giving the kitchen a better lighted corner, and putting the bathroom on the north wall, we made both bedrooms larger.

We salvaged as much material as possible from the walls we remodeled. Clapboards for the bay and gable over the porch came from the old porch. The bay was made partly from the old living-room windows, and all posts taken from the old porch were used in the new one.

Before—We had a nice view of a lake from the fr of our house, but the porch hid our view from insi

BASE-RAY units are only 7" high and 1¾" thick. They flood floor and walls with clean, draft-free, radiant heat. Believe it or not—with BASE-RAY you get less than a 3° floor-to-ceiling temperature differential even in zero weather. That spells COMFORT!

BURNHAM BASE-RAY RADIANT BASEBOARD

YOUR KEY TO MODERN HEATING COMFORT

Upstairs — BURNHAM'S RADIANT BASEBOARD PANELS

Downstairs — BURNHAM'S FUEL-SAVING YELLO-JACKET BOILER

Plan now to make your home the last word in style and comfort by installing BASE-RAY* Radiant Baseboards. These hollow cast-iron units replace the customary wooden baseboards on outside walls and are supplied with hot water or steam from your regular heating boiler. When painted to match walls or trim they are practically invisible. And you are forever rid of unsightly registers and other heating units that rob you of usable space.

And for a boiler that is the last word in efficiency, install Burnham's famous, fuel-saving Yello-Jacket in your basement or ground-floor utility room. You'll find the Yello-Jacket is amazingly economical whether you burn coal, oil or gas—and you'll enjoy an endless supply of piping hot water for bathroom, kitchen and laundry by selecting a Yello-Jacket with the built-in Taco Tankless Heater.

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

The YELLO-JACKET Boiler gets more heat from the fuel you burn because of Burnham's exclusive DOUBLE COMBUSTION chamber which greatly increases the area of the direct heating surface. A marvel of efficiency—and built for a lifetime of trouble-free service.

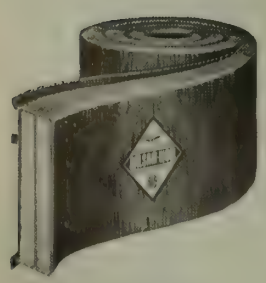
ON YOUR INSULATION QUESTIONS... MAKE A bee line FOR THIS EXPERT ADVICE!

There's an easy way to be SURE that you are getting lifetime comfort, complete protection, and fuel savings. Just see your local lumber dealer. He is an insulation expert. He has watched many different kinds of insulation perform. And his FIRST choice—among them all—is Balsam-Wool. Here's what you'll find when you see him:

Wind and Moisture Can't Rob You

Look at a sample of Balsam-Wool. Notice the tough windproof covering that completely surrounds the insulation mat. Balsam-Wool's integral vapor barrier keeps out condensing moisture—the biggest single foe of insulation. Look at the sturdy spacer flanges with which Balsam-Wool is firmly fastened in place. Remember, too, that Balsam-Wool has lifetime permanence and is highly fire retardant.

No Settling or Packing Down!



Try to shake the Balsam-Wool mat loose from its covering. You can't—because the mat is firmly bonded to that covering. Balsam-Wool can't settle or pack down—can't get out of place to leave uninsulated areas!

The Evidence Is All Around You!

Best proof of all—ask your lumber dealer to show you homes in which Balsam-Wool has been applied. Get the first-hand story from satisfied home-owners. Remember that Balsam-Wool has been applied in hundreds of thousands of homes!

Convince yourself that Balsam-Wool is the finest insulation you can buy—see your lumber dealer soon or mail the coupon for further information.

Young love

her up, giving her confidence. I was proud of them both.

Judy's prescribed course of action was a simple, obvious one. Yet because they are so obvious to us, we parents too often neglect to teach fundamentals to our youngsters. Yours may be among the precocious few who need little or no coaching in deportment. But, alas, most are closer to normal. For early romancing especially, most must be coached in even the simplest amenities, else they will suffer the maladjustment that shyness or boorishness brings. Even the experienced kid, the high-schooler or the young adult, will appreciate your tactful how-to guidance. I heard Ned Brown coaching his boy while the three of us were on the golf course one day.

"Son," Ned said, "you don't need $50, or even $20. I'll advance it if you insist, but think of this—it is considered poor taste for a man (Ned didn't say boy) to give a girl jewelry or other expensive gifts at this stage. You may love her very dearly, but you say you are not actually engaged yet. So hold it to flowers and frat pins, candy and cokes. Then she won't think you are showing off."

"I see," the boy nodded, grateful. Ned Brown was wise enough to know that no youngster is born with discretion, but has to acquire it piecemeal. Ned didn't wait until one inevitable moment to tell Tom about women. He gave it to him in comradely bits, over the years. Today Tom is among the finest young male personalities I ever knew—an appraisal shared by most of the adults and apparently all of the young ladies of our town.

In general, we parents who see romance dawning for our offspring are belabored by fear. We fe first of all, sex.

Sex is an abrupt word, at best. sounds startling, fearsome. But actuality sex is a beautiful pro sion of nature, a spiritual melody harmony of the soul. It is we human beings of limited mentalit who have made it sound ugly a seem so. We have besmirched with a snickering nastiness or wholly unreasonable sense shame. We have mistaken sex sexiness.

If we are conscientious at we realize that America is getti a terrific dosage of sexiness now days. Our children can't possib escape the influence of it in rac dramas, movies, plays, nove newspapers, or even in comme taries on the best-selling Kins Report (which was meant to be scientific treatise). As never befo we are a sex-conscious nation.

Much of that is all to the goo We have discarded, at long la the hush-hush attitude of our gran parents; we realize that accura sex information for young people priceless. Yet there is a beauty innocence, and it is this which parents would guard. We are afra that if romance arises, sex urg will somehow destroy the inn cence.

But education need not mean sacrifice of innocence. True inn cence is an avoidance of wron and knowledge of what is wrong is t best way to avoid it. Sex knowled must be given our boys and girl and the home is far and away t best place to give it. We can sure that children are going to ol tain it somewhere. When we ou selves teach them, the knowled you can use aluminum sheets—flat, corrugated, or crimped—or aluminum shingles, which are made primarily for roofing. More likely, though, you would use the new sidings that look like wood siding.

Some of the siding comes in lengths of 10 to 16 feet, in widths of 4 inches and 8 inches. A man can carry on his shoulder enough siding to cover 200 square feet—the equivalent of about 800 pounds of lumber.

For remodeling or new construction, you use it over conventional sheathing, but some kinds are stiff enough to use directly over studding and building paper. This may be a desirable economy, especially for small buildings that are strongly enough framed to get along without the bracing effect of sheathing.

These sidings appear in a number of finishes. The basic finish is plain aluminum, shiny when new, dull gray after weathering. Ordinarily, however, the siding is cleaned, primed, and painted. Some makers now supply siding with the prime coat already on, so all it needs is ordinary outside paint.

A new surfacing process should make aluminum more popular as an unpainted material requiring no upkeep. In its various forms it is called pebbling, stippling, or texturizing. It gives an attractive mat surface.

If you want your siding painted white, cream, or gray, there is something even newer that may appeal to you. Two manufacturers now offer aluminum siding with a smooth enamel finish baked on. It won't chip, crack, or buckle, they say; and you'll never have to paint it.

You see aluminum roofs in their most common form every time you go for a drive in the country: corrugated sheets on barns and occasional farmhouses.

For several reasons, including personal preference, other forms of aluminum are often used for roofing. There are interlocking shingles in several sizes (8 by 14½ inches is one of the larger sizes) that are nailed on like wood or composition shingles.

Another shingle gives a long, smooth shadow line that is most attractive on houses with low roof lines.

Because of their shape the corrugated sheets (about 2 feet wide and 6 to 12 feet long) are so strong that they will stand up without solid sheathing.

Used in similar fashion, but over [Turn to next page

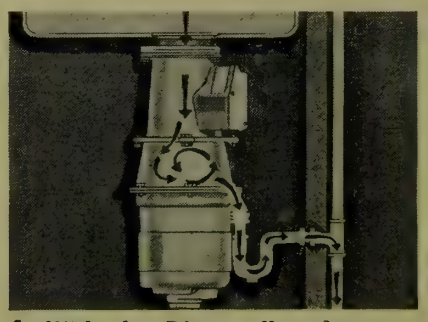
WHAT A RELIEF... NEVER HAVING GARBAGE!

The G-E DISPOSALL* gets rid of garbage automatically!

Whoopee! Just think—no more garbage ever! No germy garbage can. No kitchen mess. What a relief to have all food waste disposed of immediately, right in the sink. What a great timesaver, stepsaver. And your kitchen always clean . . . sanitary!

Just see how the G-E Disposall, the product of years of testing and development by General Electric, helps rid the home of garbage:



1. Scrape all food waste—pits, peelings, fruit rinds, even chop, chicken, and fish bones—into the drain. That's the last you see of them.

2. Lock protecting cover with a twist to the left. Notice openings in the cover for clean, flushing water to enter the Disposall as it works.

3. Turn on cold water. This automatically starts the Disposall action. Food waste is shredded into tiny particles, flushed into sewer or septic tank. The Disposall works perfectly with either sewer or septic tank.

4. With the Disposall under your sink, you'll never see garbage again. You'll agree with Disposall users who say: "My kitchen's a million times cleaner." "The Disposall's my favorite appliance." "I'd never give it up!"

SEE YOUR RETAILER TODAY!

He'll be happy to give you a demonstration of how easily and efficiently the Disposall works. He'll show you how simply it can be installed in your kitchen—how it fits most every sink. Ask, too, about the All-Electric Sink that teams up a General Electric Dishwasher with the Disposall! General Electric Co., Bridgeport 2, Conn.

Other forms of aluminum roofing resemble tradi al copper and lead roofs. Standing seam is one variet adapts well to all roof shapes, gives a permanent su unpierced by nails, and can be used on roofs with pit low as 2 inches to the foot. Putting it on is a job professional because it takes skill and special tools w the handy man probably wouldn't have.

Principal advantage of all these products is refle insulation. Any aluminum roof reflects away most o sun's heat because of its surface. Oddly enough, it tinues to do this with nearly full effectiveness even it has weathered to a dull gray. The weathering keeps it from reflecting visible light is no handica getting rid of infrared heat rays.

This insulating quality works both ways. The un side of the aluminum layer reflects downward some o heat that reaches it from below in cold weather, and it helps to keep your house warm in winter.

Aluminum foil also can give your house reflective sulation. A typical product is two layers of the foil mented to impregnated building paper that also for vapor barrier. It is used in ceilings and side walls, o is stapled to studding or rafters.

Since foil works by reflecting radiant heat, it is efficient when used in the ceiling to keep out the he the summer sun. One layer will reflect up to 95 per of this radiant heat. For this purpose—protection aga the sun—foil gives maximum protection per dollar.

Ducts, pipes, and vents of aluminum are showing u new houses. For heating ducts, aluminum is light handles easily; these same qualities show up in its use plumbing vents. Electrical conduits often are alumin now, and current-carrying wire itself may be alumin though copper remains the more common kind.

Sheet aluminum is more expensive than galvani metal for flashing and those other jobs that keep y house free from leaks and insects. But it lasts a long t because it won't rust, and it never has to be painted

Eaves troughs and downspouts of aluminum will as long as your house. You can buy them in three sty half round, Colonial box, or molded. They are appl without soldering by means of a slip joint and spe

Wherever strength with lightness is the aim, alumi- um is useful about the home: as portable furniture, lothesbaskets, movable clotheslines or supports, ironing oards, game tables, wheel toys.

Less conventional uses are for sinks and trim, blinds, wnings, electrical fixtures, stair nosing, and rails—in- luding a handrail that adds beauty and safety by con- aining concealed lighting.

When you build or remodel—whether mansion or iniature—compare aluminum's virtues and economies ith those offered by more conventional materials. May- e aluminum is right for the job.

Living outdoors is part of the plan

When you lay plans for your family room, make a handy terrace and barbecue part of the scheme. If you can place the terrace just outside the family-room door, you'll get one big indoor-outdoor living area in summer.

Gather the clan together to decide what you'll be using the terrace for. If it's a sunning terrace, you'll only need sturdy weatherproof furniture, with maybe a roof for shade on hot days. If it's a dining terrace, look for short routes to the kitchen. If you want a barbecue, too, make up your mind about the kind of cooking you'll do there and how you want to serve it.

The Eubanks voted for a complete barbecue-terrace because outdoor cooking is Mr. Eubank's hobby. And they wanted a roof to protect the barbecue and part of the terrace. You may find ideas worth borrowing in these pictures.

Storage space for terrace chair cushions and wood was part of the master plan. This deep box has two compartments so cushions can be stored separately from the fireplace logs

Grill for quick steaks makes dinner on the terrace a family affair. Dad takes charge of grilling the meat; Pat slices bread; Mother tosses the salad. Cutting board at the back is close to the chimney so it can act as a serving table, too. Hitching post is used as grill support

Close-up of the oven that doubles for cooking and for warming food shows its king-sized proportions. As Mr. Eubank requested, it's big enough for buffalo. Note the orderly arrangement of grills and forks. They're hung from iron hooks on the side of the oven where the chef can reach them

STEEL IS LONG-WEARING...

STEEL IS RESILIENT...

ANY TIME you see a U·S·S Premier Spring Wire Tag on mattresses, bedsprings or upholstered furniture, you know, for sure, that the innersprings they contain are made of quality steel wire. In beds, chairs, sofas and gliders at home, in the seats of railroad cars, busses and airplanes and the berths in Pullman cars, well-made innersprings of Premier Wire are proving every day that the "softest thing you can sleep on . . . or sit on . . . is steel."

This label is your guide to quality steel!

The U·S·S label shown here is one of a family of U·S·S labels. Some say "Stainless Steel" or "Cyclone Fence" or "Vitrenamel"... but all have the big letters U·S·S prominently displayed. Whenever you see these letters U·S·S — the trademark of United States Steel—you know the steel is good.

Onion-flavored cream? Never! Even "strong" flavors keep to themselves in an Admiral DUAL-TEMP.

Imagine! It's safe to put foods away uncovered—thanks to a whole new method of refrigeration that's so advanced there are no coils to be defrosted!

Look! It's a double-decker! Yes, it's a 2-in-1 refrigerator, There's a huge moist-cold compartment that gives fresh foods the cool, humid air they thrive on—plus a separate freezing locker that can quick-freeze foods at 20° below zero and store up to 70 pounds!

Things you never dreamed a refrigerator could do! It even has an ultra-violet Sterilamp that retards mold, controls odors and purifies the air. Separate controls to assure just-right temperatures in both compartments.

About 2,4-D

Q I'm troubled by weeds growing up in my crushed rock and gravel paths. Is there any easy way to get rid of them? C. K. Y., Montana.

2,4-D is the most effective remedy for most weeds with the exception of grasses. Use a coarse spray as shown, or try a dauber applicator with which you touch weeds you want to kill. Avoid fine spray, which might drift on other plants, and read bottle label to find correct concentration.

Q I've been told that 2,4-D may take a month to kill weeds. Can I tell without waiting if I've missed any weeds? L. J. P., Rhode Island.

Photographs: Stanley

You'll know within a week or less. The above picture of dandelions shows the typical effects of 2,4-D. Stems twist and curl wildly and may split open. Weeds gradually die, although some tough ones need more than one application. Complete kill may take several weeks, but when weeds start acting like these dandelions, it's just a matter of time.

Braiding rugs can be fun for all the family—it's that simple. Beth Jones leaves her half-finished braided rug on the floor with raw edge tucked in. That way she can work on it any time she has a free evening

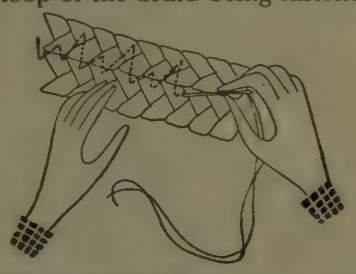
Braided rugs you can make Braiding rugs isn't hard. Beth Jones of Los Angeles has made a lot of them—out of old blankets and dye and heavy twine. Braided rugs are a fine thing under a pine table or in an Early American room. They hug the floor and don't curl or ridge underfoot. And they are the toughest and most usable of all homecraft rugs.

Need a rug? Here's how to make one.

Dye your woolens in a large pan on the stove. Follow directions on the package for dyeing woolens; this usually means boiling and stirring the wool for an hour to make it colorfast. Then hang the wool in the sun to dry.



Next, tear the wool into strips

Keep braid strips pulled tight

two inches wide. Fold the edges under and to the middle so they meet in the center. Keep the smooth side of the strip on top of the rug.

Sew the ends of three strips together and braid for a length of several feet. Then wind the braid around and around to form the rug. Fasten one row of braid to another with a large blunt needle threaded with heavy cord or twine. Pass the needle through a loop of the braid on the rug, then through a loop of the braid being fastened,

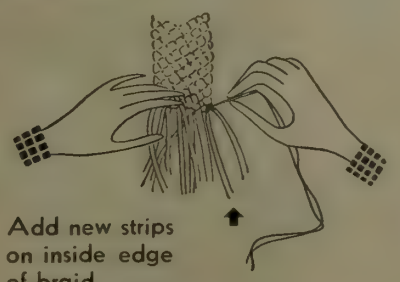
Fasten braids snug with cord or twine never skipping a loop. Sometimes you'll need to pass the needle through two loops to allow for the extra length of the new row, so keep the rug flat and check the braids. Otherwise, you'll have a braided basket instead of a rug.

When new strips must be joined to the braid, stitch them on the bias with carpet thread.



To finish the rug, taper the strips until they make a braid narrow enough to tuck into a loop. Then secure the tuck-in on the underside with carpet thread.

Whirring wheel variation

If you'd like to give your braided rug an unusual look, try this whirring wheel variation. Mrs. Mary Olive Lady, of Upland, California, has been making wheel rugs for over 30 years by using 13 one-inch strips (instead of three) and weaving them together into a firm, wide braid.

Start the center with a regular three-strip braid and braid about one-half yard. Then add two more strips—sewing them to the underside of the braid with carpet thread. Braid another half yard with five strips, then add two more strips. Keep adding two new strips on the inside edge of the braid every half yard until you have 13 strips in the braid.

Add new strips on inside edge of braid

Your braid will be about three yards long when you get all 13 strips added. Continue braiding until your rug is nearly the finished size. Then drop two inside strips, braid for half a yard, drop two more, and so on until you have only a three-strand braid left. Taper the strips until you can tuck the braid into a loop of the rug.

"I was always fretting about mine until I discovered I could tint them with All Purpose Rit—right in my washing machine. Rit really put sunshine in my curtains—and tinting them was so easy, I've gone right on 'Ritting' things."

"As all my friends in Cambridge Springs can tell you, I've gone to town with All Purpose Rit," says Miss Nesbitt. Pictures in a package

Roses on your window shades and lilies in the bathroom and Pennsylvania Dutch hearts on your kitchen cupboards—you can have them all with decals.

Decals—or pictures in a package, as we like to call them—are easy as one-two-three to apply. Moisten them, slide the design face up off the backing paper, smooth them down, and let them dry.

Here are some bright ideas for using floral decals and new Pennsylvania Dutch decals in your home.

Kitchen cabinets needn't be cold white. Try decals on doors and drawers for brightness and color—their reds, yellows, blues, and black blend with any color scheme.

Lamp shades, whether they're made of glass or parchment, can look new again when butterfly and flower decals frolic over them helter-skelter.

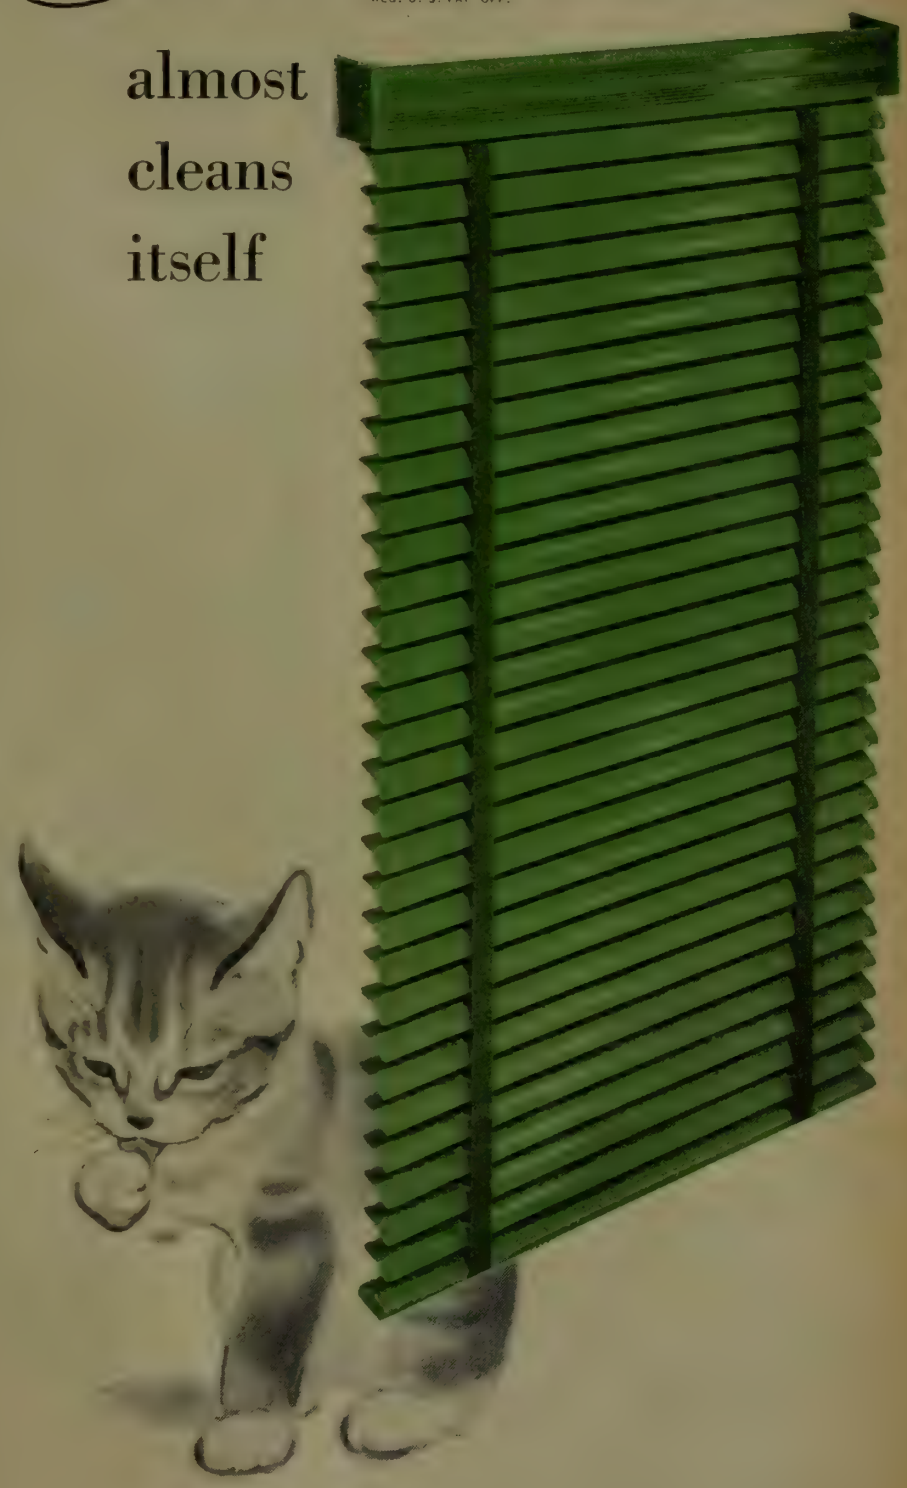
Painted furniture makes a perfect background for decals. Those tiny hearts down the side of this chest were cut from wide strips of decorative red tape.

make things brighter

Window shades sprinkled with floral decals and reinforced at the bottom with wide strips of decorative tape give you longer and prettier service

Tin canisters can be decaled to match your newly done kitchen cupboards. Then paint all the canister covers to match the chief color in the decal you choose

Flower paintings are easily made by putting several decals together. (This one was made from five rose decals.) Mount the decals on the front or the outside surface of the glass, and paint the inner surface of the glass black or some other accent color



Hatboxes or jewelry cases are fun to decorate with Dutch hearts or those pigeon-like hens. You'll even find special border designs for narrow bands around cover

This bedtime story's not for kids!

No dragons or fairy queens in this bedtime story.

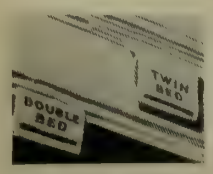
It's a strictly-for-grownups story that Mrs. Wood Sanford of Homewood, Illinois, was "driven" to write us after she read a recent Pequot Sheet advertisement.

"I think you deserve to hear about my Pequot crib sheets. In and out of the wash continuously, those six sheets lasted through my daughter's crib years. Then straight through her brother's, too."

And Mrs. Sanford mentions another important point to remember when comparing wearing qualities . . . the number of sheets in use:

"The fact that I had only 6, and two of them are still fresh and white and whole, makes my bedtime story even better."

Made for Years of Extra Wear



You simply can't beat Pequot high-count, plus-service muslins . . . for crisp, fresh appearance, for smooth, close-woven softness, for year-in, year-out wear that makes them a real value. Pequot plus-service muslins...America's most popular sheets . . . are made to outwear any other sheet you can buy at any price.

New foods

Heat and serve

Mexican dinner comes from Texas complete with preparing directions for authentic south-of-the-border flavor. The makings consist of about 30 tortilla corncakes ready for deep-fat frying, a can of enchilada sauce, and a can of frijole beans with chili sauce.

Codfish cakes are easy to make from canned mixture of flaked codfish, mashed potatoes, and seasonings.

Canned new potatoes are small, whole, peeled white potatoes. Served with a cream sauce, they seem just like creamed new potatoes right out of the garden.

Packaged mixes

Rice pudding is offered by famous maker of other packaged puddings and flavored gelatines. Each package makes enough rice pudding for 4, cooks in 8 to 10 minutes. You need only add milk. Another manufacturer is offering rice pudding in a can ready to serve.

Brownie mixes are newcomers to the mix family. One brownie mix, sold in a 12-ounce box, makes 24 chocolate-flavored fudge cakes. Another brownie mix in a can contains cashew nuts, makes 20 large brownies. All you do is add water to the boxed mix, and water and an egg to the canned mix.

Coffeecake mix is sweet yeast bread easy to make. Mix requires only water, makes two 9-inch cakes or 18 to 24 cinnamon rolls. Allow 2½ hours for mixing, rising, shaping, and baking.

Angel-cake mix comes in can. You add egg whites; cover of can is designed as measure for them. Beat whites till they're stiff, fold mix into them, and add vanilla. Bake about 1 hour in moderate oven.

Frosted-malt mix comes in a can to give you soda-fountain goodness at home. Add hot water to malt mix, freeze in automatic refrigerator tray, and whip with hand or electric beater. You have a rich, thick malted milk.

Instant potato mix gives you 10 servings of fluffy mashed potatoes in one minute! Potatoes are precooked, dried, and granulated. You bring salted water to a boil, remove from heat, add milk and potato powder, and beat. Season with butter and pepper; potatoes are ready.

Potato pancakes are made from a mix perfected by a Czechoslovakian baker. Add water to mix, let stand 5 to 10 minutes so dehydrated potatoes will soften and puff, bake on hot greased griddle.

Flavor tensers

New flavor intensifier is a white powder with no flavor of its own, but it heightens the flavor of the food in which it's mixed. Try it in soups, stews, meats, gravies, and vegetables. Chemically it's monosodium glutamate, but commercially it's sold under a variety of brand names.

Barbecue mix is a blend of spices to make catsup into a barbecue sauce. Use it for basting meats or serve as a sea-food cocktail sauce.

egins on page 9

Canned or frozen foods

Pineapple-grapefruit juice is refreshing combination of mellow and tangy flavors. Not too sweet, not too sour.

Sirloin of salmon is a new sea-food delicacy. The choicest red Alaska Sockeye salmon is selected; the skin and bone are removed. You may chill and serve it right out of the can. Also available without skin and backbone in the same brand is Keta salmon, having a pale pink meat. It's particularly suitable for salads, casseroles, and sandwich spreads.

Fresh-water lake fish is delicately flavored fish from the Great Lakes. It's an inexpensive ingredient for fish salads, croquettes, casseroles, and sandwich spreads.

Frozen variety meats of 10 kinds are offered by one leading meat packer. Included in the line are veal, beef, or lamb liver; liver and bacon; oxtail joints; lamb hearts; sweetbreads; pork tenderloin, pork patties, or pork cutlets.

Snacks, treats

Toasted coconut chips are crisp, nutty tidbits perfect to serve as accompaniment to cool beverages. The coconut is thinly sliced, toasted, salted, and sealed in a vacuum can.

Midget wieners, with barbecue sauce in a plastic sack, come packed in a 9-ounce can. The tiny chubby wieners (18 to 23 to a can) and snappy sauce make popular snack food. Serve hot or cold on your appetizer tray.

Onion puffs are a new flavor in the puff line. Other kinds are cheese, tomato, or potato puffs. They start out as little quarter-size dehydrated discs. You drop them into deep hot fat. The chips puff up five times their original size into large tender curls that are crisp and crunchy.

Sundae toppers in eight varieties are distributed by one firm, to give you the makings of a soda-fountain sundae assortment. The choice is chocolate fudge, crushed cherries or strawberries, butterscotch, pineapple, raspberry Melba, pecans or walnuts in syrup. New topper and flavoring made by another firm is date syrup.

Plastic containers

Olives in plastic sacks are handy for putting in picnic lunches and for carrying to an outdoor eating spot. Brine keeps olives moist and fresh until bag is punctured.

Plastic containers are being used more and more to house fruits and vegetables, to keep them garden fresh. Oranges marketed in plastic bags were found to lose only 1 to 4 percent weight over a 20-day shelf period, in contrast to 15 to 25 percent unprotected.

Plastic-wrapped crackers offer meal-size units. One-pound box divided by one distributor into four ¼-pound units, individually wrapped in moistureproof cellophane.

You can have too much sunshine

Your home needs light, but it must be controlled

By William Hempel

This is the way our house looked back in 1946 when Better Homes & Gardens published a story about it. Windows at the right let the California sun flood the living room; overhang protects dining-room windows and entry

"In California, so the travel folders say, the sun appears on 355 days each year. . . . That sun, and the climate which it governs, determined the design which Architect William Hempel created for his home at Menlo Park, south of San Francisco."

That's the way the story of my home began when it appeared in Better Homes & Gardens in February, 1946. But the story didn't end there.

For we found that you can have too much sun, too much light, and too much glare, especially late in the afternoon.

Our solution was to build a trellis above all windows on the west that didn't have enough overhang to protect them. This egg-crate trellis serves three purposes: It keeps the low rays of the sun off the windows without cutting out view or light; it gives colorful vines a place to grow; and it extends the long horizontal line of the living-room roof.

Now we're equipped for sunshiny days, as well as the 10 rainy ones.

Photographs: Sturtevant

We found we needed the overhang along the entire wall. Today we have an egg-crate trellis projecting out above the windows to give protection from the sun's glare in late afternoon. The trellis also supports colorful vines

For Character and Economy build with Concrete

YOU'LL be proud of the new house you're planning—and save money in the long run—if you build it with concrete masonry walls, concrete subfloors and a firesafe roof.

Concrete lends character to any house because walls can be finished in a wide variety of attractive patterns. And they can be left natural, painted any color or stuccoed, as you desire.

Concrete stretches your housing dollars, too, because a concrete masonry house is:

1. ECONOMICAL TO BUILD. Concrete's first cost is moderate compared with other construction of the same style, size or floor plan.
2. ECONOMICAL TO MAINTAIN. Concrete, being sturdy, stormproof, firesafe and termite-proof, requires less upkeep and needs fewer repairs.
3. ECONOMICAL TO HEAT. A concrete masonry house with normal insulation is snug, warm and weathertight in winter. Fuel bills stay low. In summer, on the other hand, the house is cool and dry. You'll enjoy comfortable living in your concrete masonry house the year around.

Then, too, concrete construction lasts longer so you see why a concrete masonry house is economical to own. Look at it in simple arithmetic: Moderate first cost + small maintenance expense ÷ long life = low-annual-cost shelter. Yes, it costs less to live in a concrete house!

If you'd like more information about concrete houses, write for a free, illustrated booklet, "Why People Like Concrete Homes." It pictures houses of many different styles and sizes. Distributed only in the United States and Canada.

HOW TO GET A CONCRETE HOUSE

. . . and what will it cost?

Phone a local concrete masonry manufacturer for names of architects and builders experienced in concrete house construction. They know conditions in your community and can tell you about plans and costs.

Take any plans or sketches you have to an architect. Have him show you how your home—of any size, style or floor plan—can be economically built with concrete walls, subfloors and a firesafe roof.

Whatever your hobby, a planned cabinet will he keep your equipment in order. Partitions that are d signed to fit your exact needs will store your suppli efficiently. And a well-planned exterior will make yo cabinet fit into any room. As an example, here's movie equipment cabinet that Harold D. Dolling Long Beach, California, built from plywood. Federal housing aid? No housing system has failed and sell you on government ownership of your home.

Those who favor socialized housing got their program started in 1937 with the passage of the United States Housing Act. This act created a United States Public Housing Authority, (now called the Federal Public Housing Authority) and authorized $1,600,000,000 for the financing by the federal government of so-called low-rent housing projects (owned by state or local governments) for low-income families.

The act was supposed to aid national recovery by creating employment and to clear and rebuild slum areas. The housing socialists have lobbied in each succeeding Congress for more government-owned housing. But where do they propose to stop? Some 203,000 dwelling units, whose building was subsidized by the act of 1937, are government-owned and operated today. In addition, 538,000 units of "temporary" housing are government-owned and operated. Philip Klutznick, former head of F.P.H.A., said in effect that because 38 percent of the families of this country could not afford to buy new homes, the government would have to provide them with public housing. That would mean 15 million government-owned homes. Fortunately, both the Seventy-ninth Congress, controlled by the Democrats, and the Eightieth Congress, controlled by the Republicans, refused to start us down the road to housing socialism.

Let's look at what has happened to the government-owned housing built so far.

The facts are not easy to gather because of F.P.H.A.'s inefficient, confused, and inadequate records. The General Accounting Office found them so jumbled and inaccurate that it couldn't audit them.

However, if we analyze the reports of local housing authorities we discover some interesting and pertinent facts. The basic arguments for socialized housing are (1) it houses the poor, (2) it clears the slums. The facts reveal that it does neither. The records of the housing authority of one large city which owns and operates 5,077 units of permanent public housing show that less than 10 percent of the families occupying these government-owned houses are eligible for public assistance. Senator Joseph McCarthy, of Wisconsin, who headed the Joint Congressional Committee on Housing, said:

"In no area which our committee visited did we ever find more than 4, 5, or 6 percent of the welfare group in public housing."

Nor do most government-owned houses offer lower rents than privately owned ones, despite the fact that they were subsidized for that purpose. The Detroit Board of Commerce reports that the median rent paid by tenants of government-owned houses in Detroit is $45 per month; the median for all private rental accommodations is only $38. Moreover, reports by the Bureau of Labor Statistics show that while rents for privately owned rental units—held down by rent control—have increased only 16 percent since 1940, government housing rents have jumped 69 percent.

Federal housing aid? No

But the fact that government housing rents are higher is all the more amazing when you take into account the huge subsidy, both direct and hidden, which government projects receive. The subsidy is accomplished in three ways—all cleverly concealed.

First the government makes a loan to the local housing authority, at low interest, to finance the project. Then to the local authority it gives a direct annual grant equal to about 3 percent of the construction cost. And it agrees to continue that grant for 60 years—making the total subsidy 180 percent.

Second, a further subsidy is provided in the form of exemption from most local real-estate taxes. The remaining taxpayers who own their own homes have to pay higher taxes to offset this dent in municipal revenue.

Third, the income from bonds issued to finance these socialized housing projects are exempt from federal income tax. Another loss of revenue to be made up by other income-tax payers.

It is also claimed that government housing eliminates slums. Even if every government housing project were to build on the site of a slum, few slums would be eliminated. The government housers attempt to cure a disease by treating a symptom—poor housing. Dr. Norman E. Clarke, a physician who worked in slum-area clinics for 12 years, has this to say:

"The slum should not be looked upon as a physical condition which money will eradicate. It is lack of character or mentality in people, and not poor housing, that makes poverty and makes slums. A change in quality of housing given largely gratuitously will not change the human nature of slum dwellers. The only justifiable excuse for spending public funds on slum clearance is to improve public health with a slight hope of elevating some of the dwellers or their children.

"The housing projects built by the government show slight recognition of this basic problem. Reports show that the same vicious habits and human weaknesses persist in these new areas. Whether the projects have minimized the public health risks is open to question and certainly they have done little or nothing to improve the moral character of this or succeeding generations."

If socialized housing is the answer to the slum problem, why is it that some government-owned projects, after a short time, have become slums? A good example is Willow Run Village. This large government-built project having a population of 11,000 is exclusively owned and operated by the federal government. The Rev. Robert O. Boetiger, former army chaplain who became pastor of Christ Lutheran Church at Willow Run a little over two years ago, said in a public statement, "It is becoming a poison village . . . of broken homes, illegitimacy, truancy, desertion."

Reverend Boetiger talked about the village as quietly as a doctor discussing a sick patient. He cited cases and figures to back up his charges that his community has social poison in its veins. He quoted a report by two social workers, Arne Erickson and Alberta Sorenson, which cited a long list of family fights serious enough to bring the police.

"Juvenile delinquency, in the project, is rising," says Reverend Boetiger. During summer vacation, $3,000 worth of windows were smashed in three schoolhouses.

He adds: "Mrs. Edna MacFarlan, visiting teacher for the Willow Run school district, has 80 children on her case load. Of them, 21 are from broken homes, six the result of desertion, three are illegitimate, and we know of others.

"We have problems of common law 'marriage', social disease, and families where wife beating is the rule, not the exception."

Housing will not answer the problem of the slum. Only recognition of unpleasant reality will meet this issue. But it is much easier to subsidize government housing and shout about the defects of the capitalistic system. It is much easier to lay the blame on Wall Street than to lay the blame where it belongs—on the apathetic, lazy-minded, fact-dodging American people. We prefer to dodge real issues. So we take the easy way out. We let misguided reformers and cold-blooded, self-seeking persons persuade us that the whole thing is very simple: Just provide government housing and the slum will disappear. Will adequate housing provide the answer to the wife beater, the child torturer, or the irresponsible drunkard? Or will the subsidy he receives in government housing merely aid him in financing more misconduct? We can afford billions for a program which will really eliminate and prevent

There are five basic types of products available fo the job—dye, stain, rubber-base paint, oil-base paint and liquid linoleum. The main steps in using these prod ucts are shown in the photographs; variations in proce dure for each product are described in detail in the text

Concrete dye

A concrete dye does not merely coat the surface; it penetrates well into the material and cannot wear off. This is a great advantage, but it also means the work must be done exactly right. You should apply dye only to concrete that is thoroughly clean and acid-etched to permit dye to penetrate deeply.

Cleaning is the first job; you must remove all oil, grease, soap, and paint.

If the floor has not been painted, the job is relatively simple. Begin by scraping grease spots, then cover them with a layer of sawdust and soak the sawdust with a solution of one pound of lye to a gallon of water. Dissolve lye slowly and carefully so it won't splatter on you, and wear rubber gloves and goggles. Leave soaked sawdust overnight, then scrape it off. If necessary, repeat until oil or grease is gone.

How to color concrete surfaces

In a basement or laundry, you're likely to find that concrete near tubs is coated with soap. Check by dripping water on suspected areas to see if it is repelled, as it will be by soapy concrete. The same lye and sawdust treatment will remove soap.

For general cleaning, scrub the floor with a solution of trisodium phosphate, dissolving one pound of the chemical in a gallon of warm water. Use a stiff scrubbing brush, and rinse with clear water.

Old paint is tough to remove, but lye treatment will work. Pour solution over painted concrete, let it stand for an hour, scrub the surface with a stiff brush, and flush the lye off with water. Then the paint should scrape off fairly easily. If your paint is stubborn, try lye and sawdust overnight.

You can also remove paint with a rented floor-sanding machine. Use only open-coat silicon carbide sandpaper. Floors having several coats of old paint call for No. 4-16 sandpaper; others, No. 3½-20.

The floor sander won't work closer to walls than about four inches. Do the edges with an edger or disc sander, or remove those small stretches of paint with lye.

Acid etching is the second step. It removes the slick surface that troweling puts on concrete.

Buy one gallon of commercial muriatic acid for each 150 to 200 square feet of floor. Dilute each gallon of acid with two gallons of water, in an enamelware or wooden bucket or a granite crock.

Put on rubber gloves, rubber overshoes, and goggles. Then slosh the diluted acid on the floor and brush it out with a long-handled scrubbing brush.

The acid will fizz on the concrete. It should; that shows it's working. Don't try to spread the acid too thin; work it well into the surface with the brush. Under a good light, examine the floor for slick spots not properly etched. Scrub more acid into them.

You want a uniform, slight roughness. To get it, two applications of acid are usually required. If there are still hard, slick spots, give them local treatment with a stronger acid mixture—one part acid to one part water.

After each acid cleaning, hose the floor with plenty of clean water. Let the floor dry completely before going on with the next step, the application of dye. It isn't enough for the concrete to be surface-dry; it must be dry all the way through. A warm basement floor in winter will usually dry in about a week. In summer, it may take two weeks even with windows open and an electric fan or two helping.

Dye application. Now you come to the easiest part of the job.

You'll need a gallon of dye for each 150 to 200 square feet. Keep the dye stirred. Use a flat-bottomed pan and apply dye with your long-handled scrubbing brush.

Keep going for about 20 minutes, when the first part of the floor will get a dull, even tone. Then go over the same area again, scrubbing in more dye—a process called "fixing." Some light spots may be showing; they need more dye. Scrub dye off glossy spots and onto light ones.

When you have treated the entire floor, leave it overnight. Then examine it in a good light. Any glossy spots should be rubbed vigorously to remove excess dye. Now let the floor dry completely. This may take only a day or two for an outdoor terrace, as much as a week in a damp basement.

Dressing, sold with the dye, is applied when the floor is dry and swept clean of dust and grit.

If you use a self-polishing dressing, just brush on a full, wet coat with an ordinary paintbrush and keep people from walking on it until the next day.

Standard dressing is scrubbed on with a long-handled scrubbing brush. When dry, from one hour to half a day later, polish it with the same brush. If the brush seems to stick to the surface, let the dressing dry longer.

One gallon of the no-buff dressing will cover about 400 square feet. The standard kind goes on thinner, covers twice as much.

Maintenance. A dyed floor is easy to keep up. The usual treatment is an occasional dry mopping or a few strokes with a push broom.

If the floor is used a lot, the dressing will begin to wear off after a few months. With standard dressing, simply put more dressing on worn spots, let dry, then buff. With no-buff dressing, remove any oily film with naphtha or turpentine, put dressing on worn spots and let dry, then coat the surface again.

Concrete stain

Staining is a relatively simple operation. It will give even results on a floor with a uniform surface. Be sure you are using a concrete stain; wood stains are not the same thing. Concrete stains should not be applied to new concrete until it has stood at least six or eight weeks to cure adequately.

Stains penetrate the surface and stand wear and sunlight well. Colors available include gray, green, brown, red, and blue.

Cleaning comes first. Use a trisodium phosphate solution plus lye where necessary.

Staining is a three-coat process if you use one of the special concrete stains recently put on the market.

Brush stain on quickly. It will foam. Brush gently over the foaming area until the foaming ends, then leave it alone. Work for a wet edge, as in painting, to avoid lap marks. If puddles form in uneven places, go back and brush out the whole area. [Turn to next page

Let the first coat stand until dry; eight hours should be plenty. Put on a second coat the same way.

When this is dry, mop the whole surface with clean water and hose it off to remove residue.

Spread on the final finish coat with a soft cloth. It comes in a separate container and is sold with the stain. It completes the staining and protects the surface.

Rubber-base paint

Paints made with a chlorinated-rubber base are quite new.

They were developed because oil-base paints are not always reliable on concrete.

Use of a rubber-base paint gets around this problem. Rubber-base paints are made in dozens of colors, and can be mixed to other shades.

Cleaning is a necessary first step unless the concrete is fresh and untouched by greasy materials. Use method previously described.

Acid-etching is usually recommended, though some manufacturers consider it merely advisable, rather than essential. The process is the same as described for dye, except that a weaker acid mixture is adequate—one gallon of acid to three gallons of water.

Painting is done after the floor has dried for at least a week. The paint goes on with an ordinary brush, two coats being usual. To be safe, allow 24 hours between coats and before walking on the final coat. One gallon of rubber-base paint will put two coats on 150 to 200 square feet of floor.

Oil paint for concrete

Oil paints made for use on concrete are the easiest to use. They are considerably less expensive than the rubber-base varieties. They have good wearing qualities if there is no moisture in the concrete.

Special cleaning is not always necessary when oil paint is to be used. But it is important to remove greasy stains and old paint that is in bad condition.

Liquid linoleum

A new one-coat product that can be applied thickly enough to hide roughness is especially useful for difficult conditions. It is liquid linoleum, put on with a brush and smoothed out in a heavy coating that dries all the way through.

It can be used for outdoor terraces or protected floors.

Clean the concrete with soap and hot water, followed by a thorough hot-water rinsing to remove soap.

Apply the fluid linoleum by brushing it on full strength, using enough to cover unevenness in the concrete. The liquid may be thinned by warming slightly.

Keep surface in good condition by waxing it occasionally.

slums. We cannot afford a nickel for a program which diverts public interest, conceals the real problems, and therefore insures continuance of the slum.

Tighe Woods, the man who controls rents, said recently that he thought it was the duty of government to see that everybody had a home at a rental that he could afford to pay.

Government does not owe us any such thing. All we Americans want is the right to earn our daily bread, the right to be secure in our persons and property, the right to own our own homes under a system of free enterprise.

The real issue is not just one of government ownership of our homes. It is whether this country is going to build its future economy on Marxian Socialism, or whether it is going to continue to improve individual living standards under an enlightened system of free enterprise.

If the objective of some government housers were attained and even 38 percent of the people lived in subsidized government housing, this 38 percent plus government employees would, for all practical purposes, control federal elections. We would have state socialism.

A nation, a majority of whose people are on a government dole, cannot survive as a free people. Such a nation could not even survive as a socialist state. It would inevitably become an autocracy, with the most powerful bureaucrat becoming the dictator of all rights and privileges.

The people of Germany traded their freedom for better housing and other government favors and got Hitler.

It happened there; it can happen here. That is, unless the real purpose of left wing "social reformers" is clearly understood, and their activity in government be made to conform to the spirit as well as the letter of American democracy.

So-called government-owned low-rent housing is the cornerstone of a new edifice called state socialism. Do you want it? If not, get busy and help inform your friends and neighbors of the truth about this powerful minority drive before it is too late!

You can't expect to get good work out of your hand tools unless you know how to handle them and keep them in repair.

Once you learn the correct grip on any tool, you're a long way toward using it skillfully. And when you know how to keep tools sharp, rust-free, well lubricated, and comfortable to hold, you can count on faster, cleaner, more accurate work.

The basement, where most tools are kept, is the worst place to keep them. Few basements are dry enough to keep tools rust-free without silica gel or magnesium chloride to dehydrate the air. A jar of either of these chemicals in each tool drawer will help. But to keep the entire basement dry, thus protecting hanging tools, is a large order; it's best to wipe metal parts of hanging tools with a rag saturated with light machine oil. Handle oiled tools only by the wooden handles.

If your tools do rust, there are several dependable rust removers on the market. They will work unless corrosion has gone so deep that pitting has occured. Keep a bottle of rust remover on hand, with a package of fine steel wool to use with it.

In addition to keeping your tools rust-free, oil all moving parts regularly. Light machine oil is best. Revolving wooden handles need oiling just as much as do metal handles.

Check wood handles for splinters or rough spots which might cut or blister your hands. Fine sandpaper, followed by light wiping with linseed oil on a rag, will keep handles trim.

And store your tools carefully. Chisels and other keen-edged tools should have their own compartments where edges won't be dulled against metal objects. Planes should be laid on their sides. Drills and bits may be racked, rolled in oil canvas, or laid carefully in a wood-lined drawer. Even files will lose their cutting qualities if left in dusty, oily, or greasy places to fill with dirt. And for safety, as well as good care, rack up handsaws or store them in slotted drawers to protect their hundreds of teeth.

The pictures that follow will give you basic pointers on use and care of the seven most common hand tools.

Keep the bed of your plane smooth and dry. Use fine steel wool to polish the bottom, rust remover if it is needed. Remove lever cap (top) and plane iron and cap (lower left) before buffing, to prevent dulling of the cutting edge. A paraffined or grooved bed slides easily

"This isn't the way I used to build"

THAT'S RIGHT, Pop, building methods have changed a lot in these last few years. Back in the days when you were building houses, insulated sheathing was a novelty. Nowadays it's standard practice. Everybody wants a stronger house and one that's easier to heat . . . especially when you can get it with Armstrong's Temlok® Sheathing without spending any more than you would for ordinary materials. Sometimes it actually costs less!

No matter whether you use brick, stone, wood, or stucco for the exterior finish, you'll have a better house if the walls are built with Armstrong's Temlok Sheathing. When Temlok is nailed to the framework, it braces the whole structure, making it sturdy and solid for the entire life of the house.

Temlok Sheathing is made of millions of strong wood fibers that have been separated and then put back together to form these big, strong boards. Around each fiber there's a thin coating of asphalt that adds still more strength and seals out dangerous moisture.

A house built with Temlok Sheathing is more comfortable to live in and a lot easier to heat. That's because Temlok is a good insulating material, too. It stops heat from leaking out through the walls in winter and helps to keep the house cool in summer.

Temlok saves you money, too. It costs less to install because the carpenter can put it up in a lot less time than ordinary sheathing. There's almost no waste of material. Besides that, your fuel savings start from the time you move in and go on year after year.

When you see Armstrong's Temlok Sheathing on a new house, it's a sure sign of good construction. Ask your lumber dealer for complete details about Temlok Sheathing and other Armstrong Building Materials, before you build or remodel.

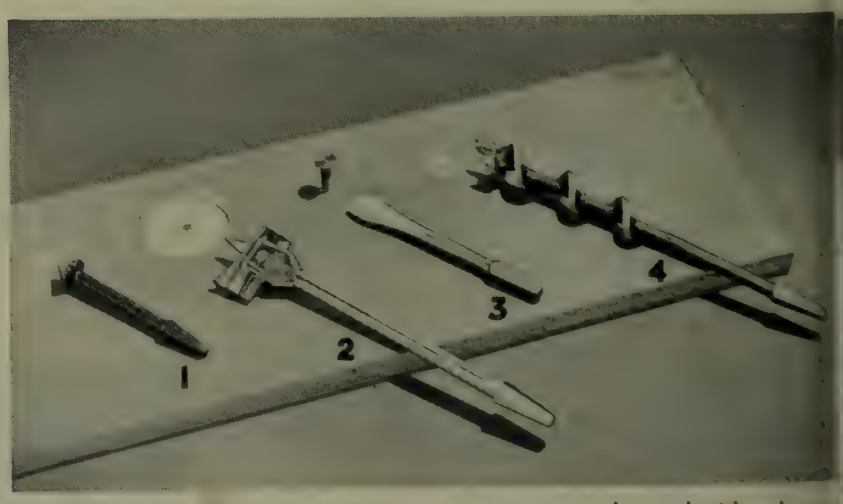
ARMSTRONG'S TEMLOK

One of the building materials made by the makers of Armstrong's Linoleum



Keep brace oiled, bits keen

A brace is useful drilling tool for home use. It will take the largest bits, but will also handle the smallest of square shanked bits or drills. Correct grip shown lets you sight and guide the bit at a right angle. A good brace should have a smooth-acting ratchet and spring-action jaw

Arrows show the oiling point on an ordinary brace. Working from the top down along the crank are: head oiling hole, ends of crank-handle collar, ratchet dogs and collar, chuck shaft, and chuck shell. Jaws in side shell are the parts that get the most wear, but they can be removed and replaced by unscrewing the shell all the way off from the inner chuck shaft

These are the four varieties of bits most commonly used with a brace: 1) countersink bit used to make conical recesses for flat-headed screws; 2) expansive bit, used to drill holes from 1 to 3 inches in diameter; 3) screwdriver bit, for fast work with a large number of screws or for heavy screwdriving; 4) auger bit, for holes ⅛ to 1 inch in diameter

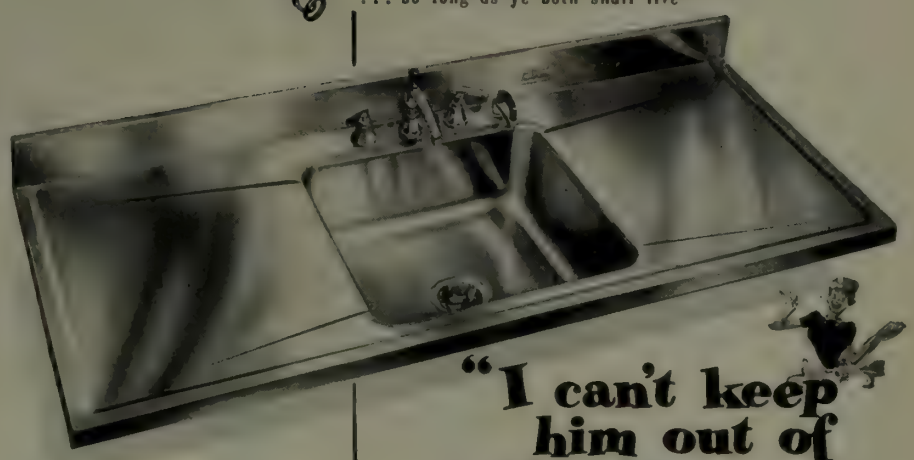
To sharpen an auger or twist bit, use a file, clamping the bit in a vise. A three-cornered file is adequate, but a special file is made for this purpose. Sharpen the lips as you would a chisel, observing the 20-degree angle and leaving the outside curve of the lips untouched except for trimming off the wire edges

The depth-cutting edges of a bit are nothing more than two chisel edges at the ends of the twists. File them as pictured, on the upward (tang) side of the edge, pressing only on the forward stroke. Don't file on the side toward the lead screw, or your cutters will only slide on the wood like ski points. Be careful not to cut your hands on the sharp lead screw and lips

Tighten up pliers



Pliers are simple to hold; just lay them across your palm and close your fingers around the handles. A grip with the little finger inside one handle will let you open the jaws easily without using the other hand. With the jaws wide open, pivot bolt will slide into the other hole, giving pliers a wider bite

If the pivot nut and bolt should loosen, wire-cutting and gripping action of pliers will be impaired. Tighten bolt and nut for free play without wobbling, then lock nut tight with a center punch. The fine serrations at the jaw ends and the coarser ones at the middle should be kept clean; rake them out with a wire brush or a sharp three-cornered file when necessary

Keep saws sharp and rust-free

A handsaw should not be forced. Start cut near heel of sa drawing lightly upward until cut is deep enough to fin without guiding thumb. Pivot strokes at shoulder and elbo without twisting body. Use a rip saw with grain, a cross across grain. Nine points to the inch is a good tooth

When a saw pulls hard, it may be rusty, dull, or lacking set (teeth bent enough to either side to make a cut wide enough for free action). Remove rust with rust solvent, rubbing with steel wool and wetting and rerubbing until metal is bright. Dullness, lack of set, or both call for a trip to a saw filer

Saws get kinked, especially when dull. Straighten gentl kinks with your fingers; sight down blade to check worl Sharp kinks yield to harsher methods, like the tapping shown Use a wood, leather, or plastic mallet, and strike up-curve part of the kink, laid on a wood surface, until saw is straigl

A few gallons of paint made the difference!

Freshly painted, your house is more than just beautiful.

It's actually worth more!

In a nationwide survey, real estate experts agreed that a good paint job increases the value of a house at least 12%. So take a careful look at the paint on your house.

With replacement and repair costs so high, it's awfully important to keep expensive, paint-preventable damages from getting started.

Fortunately, great new paints come from the paint scientists' laboratories continuously. These new paints cover better; dry quicker; stay cleaner; last longer. They give measurably greater protection and beauty to your house. They emphasize that it always costs more not to paint!

Start with the Finish. The same scientists who made such tremendous improvements in paints have perfected whole families of super-finishes.

These new finishes withstand abuse on hot stoves, cold refrigerators, and wet washing machines . . . protect furniture from alcohol, grease and scratches . . . give lasting beauty to everything from autos to water heaters!

Take advantage of this research by insisting on the best finishes when you buy. At the start, consider the finish!

File screwdriver blade square and flat

Correct grip on screwdriver circles handle with fingers and thumb for twist, uses forefinger for guidance, heel pad for push (left). When you use a large screwdriver for heavy work, use grip at right. One hand gives a powerful twist while the other presses the handle end to keep screwdriver in the slot. Choose screwdriver for a snug fit in the screw slot

Working end of a screwdriver should be square and straight, with sharp corners and no curves. Clamp the shaft in a vise, with only a short bit projecting to prevent chatter, then file as shown. File only on the forward stroke. The taper at the sides should be very gradual; a chisel-like taper will force the driver out of the screw slot, burring the slot

Wood chisels must be razor-sharp

When you use a chisel, keep your free hand behind cutting edge. Chisel grip is like screwdriver grip, but left hand is used to direct and apply pressure to the blade. Use chisel with bevel up. Tap only with leather, wood, or plastic mallet. Diagonal strokes give cleanest cut

Don't grind chisel or other edged tool unless you have a water-bath stone to prevent burning away of temper. Hone on a combination stone (rough side first, fine side for finish), holding blade at a 20-degree angle and working it in a figure-eight or circular pattern. Hone only the bevel side; remove wire edge by laying chisel flat, bevel up, and pushing it forward on fine side of stone

Chisel handles take a beating. Even when they are tapped with soft mallets, they may be split or battered until the grip is hard on your hand. Keep metal rings tight, and handles firmly set in sockets. To keep handle easy on your hand, sand the top smooth against your palm

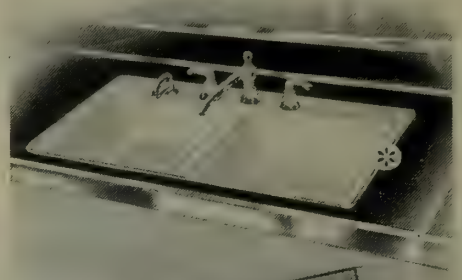
Select hammers with care

A hammer, like a shotgun, should be bought for balance and weight. Swing it a few times; if it's tiring, choose a lighter one. Correct grip is direct handshake, hammer head pointing down as you grasp the handle. Choke (short-grip) handle for light, accurate work; use longer grip for heavy work



Loose hammer heads can be tightened by driving wedges. Stand the hammer on bench or floor so the head won't be bounced loose as you drive wedge. If drying has loosened the handle, a combination of wedging and soaking in water may be needed

When a hammer handle is cracked or broken, replace it for safety. Cut off old handle close to the head, place on blocks as shown (or in a vise), and drive the rest of the handle out with a blunt punch or bolt. File or grind new handle to fit the socket, drive it into place by striking the butt end on a solid surface, and drive wedges

Radio-phonograph cabinet

Antique pine chest plays a modern role

Closed, the chest is still an antique

If you're looking for a radio-phonograph cabinet that will fit in with Early American furniture, you can remodel an old chest as Avery Rennick, Los Angeles, did. Mr. Rennick removed the drawers from this small pine chest—then put his radio-phonograph inside. He screwed the drawer fronts to plywood panels to make hinged doors for the front of the chest; he cut a lift lid from the chest top. When the doors are closed (above), the pine chest still looks like a charming antique. When the doors are open (below), the radio-phonograph is ready for use. Extra space inside the chest holds both large and small record albums.

Anyone can build this

Screen

Do you need a partition in your home, or privacy in your yard? Here's a screen of many uses that anyone can build, and that any pocketbook can pay for.

The only materials you need are wooden laths, some 2x2 lumber for framing, a few small finishing nails, screws, hinges, and paint. The only tools you need are a hammer, screwdriver, and paintbrush.

These photographs show you how to do the job.

Photographs: Peter Gowland

1 Wet lath at intervals over a day or so to make it bend easier. Buy green wood, and select lath that is uniform in length to avoid sawing

2 For each section, lay four 2x2's on floor, and nail a lath across top to hold them in place. Weave the lower lath through uprights and nail

3 Stand frame upright and weave laths through it. Start in the middle, bending laths at each end. At the top, take off brace and nail top lath to outside uprights. Fasten the sections together with hinges of many uses

By Alice Gowland

4 When lath is dry, the screen can be painted. Here, paint is applied with vacuum-cleaner spray. A brush can be used or wood left natural

This two-unit, six-foot-high screen was built in four hours, cost only $6

Although this was intended for indoor use, screens made of lath can be equally useful outdoors. Make uprights a few inches longer than lathed portions, so they can be pointed and driven into the ground or set in postholes can be balanced with the moral values we want our children to have. This is a duty we cannot leave to the schools. In short, there comes a time in every family when telling the kids is an inescapable responsibility.

"But what shall I tell them?" "And how?"

I know what you mean. To be sure, you know literally what, for in this modern age you are an educated, intelligent parent. Yet you—and I—may be affected by the senseless taboo that was on all sex information in our youth, and by the even more senseless flaunting of sexiness today. Remember this—nature in her wisdom planted in every child a marvelous, if intangible, mechanism known as curiosity. If left to its own devices it has discretion. But human society, being imperfect, has made it impossible for adolescent curiosity to function properly. Hence we must aid it.

Good books can be laid before an older child as suggested reading. Your physician, your librarian, your minister, priest, or rabbi, or the service bureau of this magazine, can suggest some if you wish. Conferences about what is read can be an easy bridge over any embarrassment, if you initiate them.

We can expand, within limits, the information that son or daughter asks for. If none is asked for, we can start from scratch and impart basic facts as casually and as satisfactorily as if we were discussing food. Do it matter-of-factly, with no melodramatic tone or poetic approach, sticking to simple realism. The older the child, the more detailed you can be, especially if the romance is a third or fourth or fifth one, with potential marriage in sight.

"We told our boy a few fundamentals when he first showed an inclination to be alone with one girl," a neighbor said recently. "Within the month that first romance waned, then two more came and went. When his fourth 'true love' began, he was more intent about it. He came to me one day and said, 'Dad, why do I always want to touch Dorothy? To put my hands on her and—and well, kiss her, like they do in the movies?' He paused a moment, then added, 'Is it all right if I do?' "

It is all right, if! If you, the parent, teach him the importance of moderation, of restraint. A kiss at 16 is an event to remember! A habit of promiscuous necking at 16 —or any age—is a pitiful and needless shame. I know, the division line is a thin one; the best we can do is teach our children to listen to their own consciences and harken to common-sense warnings. To get that across takes a parent-and-child intimacy too seldom found but easy enough to achieve if you can find the heart to attempt it.

Chances are overwhelming that your adolescent already knows about the actual processes of mating and birth. But chances are even greater that he (or she) may not have clearly related those physical facts with this strange new phenomenon called desire. He may have sadly warped impressions, misunderstandings, imaginings, and impulses; he will surely have if his education is left to chance. It is not necessary that you try to enlighten him about all the strange emotional influences involving sex—for neither you nor I nor any other person has ever fully understood them! But teach him sympathetically, how desire can be degrading or incomparably wondrous and fine. Teach him that while love and desire are related, they are not synonymous; that both are sacred, and can be eternally inspiring. Your thinking here may enrich your own life as well, for a teacher often learns more than his pupil.

My personal feeling is that physical sex information had best be imparted piecemeal. Not too much before puberty; not too much how-to even on the day before marriage, for, after all, the thrill of discovery for one's self in marriage is valuable, to a degree. It should be enough to prevent physical and emotional distress, but not enough to create one of those educated, yet somehow obnoxious, boys and girls who know too much, who may even be clean, yet are wordly wise beyond their years. Because their clan is pitiable. They have lost the ineffable glow of youth, the intelligent innocence, the serenity which can blossom in childhood then be heightened throughout life.

And anyhow, sex knowledge is but one phase of the training—a fact which we impetuous parents often forget. Young Miss Jeannie Wilson that morning was not only aware of her physical structure and its operational plan, she was also socially poised. Is your daughter poised? Your son?

Careful study will show you that poise comes primarily from two sources—a realization that one looks right, and that one is capable of saying the right things. It's as simple as that.

Dress, then, is more important to young people than we might suspect. We see them in slap-happy shirttails and jeans, strange modes of the moment. Okay, if that's right, they will feel it, and gather assurance from it. You and I will be foolish to insist on what we might consider more suitable attire. Fortunately, the kids themselves usually develop increasingly good taste, and have a sense of what's appropriate for courting. And yet, kids are extremists. Your Jeannie will be wanting evening gowns cut below her years, and above your means. Your Marvin will be conniving for new and flashier suits, hats, neckties. The best we can do is help them temper such enthusiasm; and to remember that correct clothing somehow encourages correct deportment.

Lord help me, when I went to my first party, at age 12, I wore new shoes that squeaked, and I walked on my heels or stood in a

Key to better production

Better production comes from many things—better factory layout, better placing of machines, better flow of materials.

It comes from working conditions that enable better workers to do better work—from methods and controls that keep constant watch on the quality of things made.

It comes from making difficult production jobs easier. And it comes from turning out millions of units yearly—in volume which leads to mass-production savings.

Better production, as well as better research and engineering, gives you greater value in a General Motors car.

NOW! HENRY J. TAYLOR on the air every Monday evening over the ABC Network, coast to coast.

With our garage opening at the rear of the house, we have a turn-around that gives us an all-weather play and lounge area completely shielded from view from the street. If you have an alley, you need no paved turning place

Our garage faces away from the street

By Dr. and Mrs. Howard E. Puckett

We faced the garage doors of our Amarillo, Texas, home away from the street. And we had three good reasons for pointing them that way:

We object to the dark cavern that appears when doors of most attached garages are open—a cavern that makes the houses look lopsided.

We wanted a private play and lounge area.

We wanted to be facing the street when we came down the driveway.

With garage doors at the back, our house presents an uncluttered view from the street, and will continue to look well if we add a bedroom or study over the garage.

Moreover, we still have the other advantages of an attached garage—protection against the northwest wind, and flexibility for future expansion.

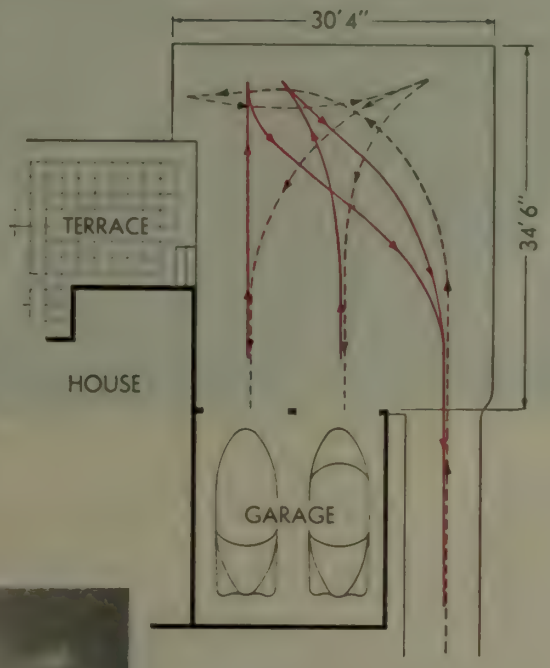

Diagram (above) shows how we turn around at the end of the driveway. Concrete area is about 30½ by 34½ feet, giving us plenty of room for maneuvering. We never have to back into passing traffic

From the street side the garage doesn't look like a garage. By putting its back to the street, we avoided the black hole beyond open doors, and the intimate view you get into an attached garage

Give your baby a chance to explore

Solitary confinement never helped anyone. It's especially bad for the young child who needs to examine his world

By Ann Usher

Photograph: Josef Schneider, Childhood Reflections

Keeping your baby strapped or fenced in against his wishes can thwart his growing independence

Playpens, high chairs, low chairs, walkers, and little tables with seats set in, each is fine for its purpose. But none of them was intended to serve as a place of solitary confinement for your baby. Yet that's what they become all too often.

No mother means to put her baby in jail and keep him there. But for reasons of safety, convenience, and cleanliness, it often happens that Baby is placed in his playpen, or strapped in a chair or walker, and left there much longer than is good for him.

The younger baby, of sitting-up age, still needs to develop control of his muscles by rolling over, stretching flat on his stomach, lying on his back, kicking, reaching, and pulling himself up to a sitting position. He can't do these things if he is strapped in a chair for all his waking hours.

It's easy to leave your baby in a teeter swing for long periods because he seems content—or even if he fusses, because you can satisfy him by handing him a different toy or jouncing him up and down. But just a-sittin' and a-lookin' is a dull occupation for babies, just as it is for adults.

Let your baby have his meals in his chair. He may sit awhile at other times, too. But keep the periods short. Then transfer him to his playpen or a pad on the floor. There, he'll have his chance to move about—and creep, when he gets ready.

For the older baby though, a playpen may become a prison instead of a place of freedom. He can't satisfy his curiosity about the world as long as he's bounded by a fence. He wants to reach and touch all that he sees.

This urge comes earlier to some babies than to others. When you deny it and force your baby to stay put, he may rebel [Turn to page 236

far less than the cost of many pianos

What only the wealthy could once afford—Remember the wish you made years ago? That some day you would have that symbol of success in your own home—a real Wurlitzer Organ? And from your hands would flow the sounds of magnificent music? Today, your wish comes true. Wurlitzer, through the miracle of electronics and years of research, has developed a home organ for only $1095*.

Easy as a radio to install, easy as a piano to play—This Wurlitzer Organ comes ready to plug in and play. Easy to play, too—even for beginners. If you know just a little about playing the piano, you can sit right down and play this Wurlitzer. And how it responds to the touch of your fingers! Whether it's a gay party tune or the music of the masters, your hands create more than music . . . a great emotional experience!

This price is F.O.B. North Tonawanda, N. Y. Prices in your vicinity may be slightly higher due to freight or delivery costs.*

In the tradition of the "Mighty Wurlitzer"—Though it takes up no more space than a small piano, this home Wurlitzer is no musical toy. It is a precision instrument patterned after the "Mighty Wurlitzer." The proved pipe-organ principle of wind-blown reeds gives it a full and majestic voice —tone that is rich, pure and vibrant throughout its wide and impressive range.

Only Wurlitzer makes a complete line—If you haven't seen the Wurlitzers, you haven't seen America's only complete line of electronic organs. Not one or two, but four distinct models, each in your choice of finishes. Special finishes to match your home, if you wish. Prices range to $3895.

More people buy Wurlitzer Pianos . . . than those of any other name. The reason is simple. Though no piano made contains finer parts or costlier materials, the Wurlitzer is priced far below other well-known makes. What makes this possible? Wurlitzer is the world's largest maker of keyboard instruments.

Give your baby a chance to explore against the pen. Most babies are content in a playpen until they learn to walk, and even after that for short periods. Occasionally, one will rebel at 9 or 10 months.

This age of exploration is apt to be a trying one for you. Your baby isn't old enough to be allowed unsupervised run of the house. Still, your housework has to be done, and you can't give up your whole day to watching Baby.

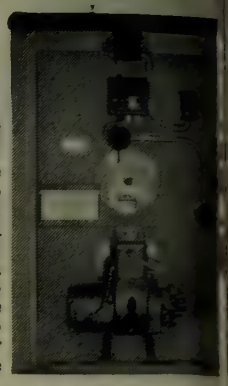
This need to explore is so important that it merits special planning on your part. Baby's curiosity is proof of his alertness and growing independence. To make him stay crying in his pen when he wants to get out is to hold back this period of development, and shake his confidence in himself—and in you.

Try to anticipate your baby's desire to roam. Lift him out of his playpen, chair, or crib before he tires of it. Then he won't get the idea that he is getting his way by crying.

Some of your housework can be combined with baby-watching. It's not easy, I'll admit, to work with a crawler or toddler underfoot. But a chance to poke and investigate is so important to your baby that it's worth your effort.

It's not too difficult to run the dustcloth over the furniture or the dry-mop over the floors while Baby wanders about the room. Or you can carry him upstairs and let him stay with you in the bedroom, with the door closed, while you make the beds.

Sure, he'll sample the contents of the wastebaskets, tug at the bedclothes, and play with the shoes in the closet. What harm if he does? You'll have an eye on him to make sure he doesn't get hold of anything dangerous.



In good weather you can do small chores outside while your young explorer ranges over his own back yard. And when you go for a walk, let him take his little side trips to examine things that catch his interest.

During this phase of your baby's growth, it's well to clear the decks in both house and yard. Put breakable things out of Baby's reach. Valuable knickknacks should be put away. Otherwise, someone in your family may use them and forget to return them to a safe, high place.

Now is the time to substitute metal ash trays for glass or china ones. Move your treasured books to the highest shelves. Put Baby's picture books and magazines he can handle on the lower shelves. Check your house for safety. Lamps can be disconnected and their cords wound round their bases. Make sure there are no hazards in your kitchen if you let your baby play there when you're working.

You may feel that all these precautions are giving in too much to Baby. True, he may be trained by the "no, no, no, mustn't touch" method. But really to learn he needs to handle and investigate everyting he can. To deprive him of this privilege in the interests of precise housekeeping is like cutting him off from a year or two of school to suit your own convenience—and you wouldn't think of doing that!

If you arrange these opportunities for your baby to explore, he'll be more content to stay in his crib or playpen when it's absolutely necessary for him to be there. And when he goes exploring with you, you'll be right at hand to enjoy with him the delights of his discoveries.

This will be the reward for your patience—when working with baby-on-the-loose seems difficult.

Redesigned for outdoor living—I

They bricked their lawn

Photographs: Fein

Here's proof that a front yard can be attractive and livable even when brick entirely replaces a lawn. Raised brick flower boxes against house front help make terrace a real garden

Upper service walk leads to rear from right side of front terrace. Easy transition between plantings makes walk an attractive part of the garden instead of just a necessary evil

Back terrace has everything needed for pleasant open-air living. If rain puts a damper on your own outside living, you'll appreciate shelter which makes terrace usable on wet days. Cupboards hold dishes and utensils for cooking and dining

We tell the stories of three homes whose owners found ways to get more from their outdoor living. Here is the first:

By E. L. Anderson
Landscape Architect

After redesigning their garden for outdoor living, Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Diddle are ready to offer you two bits of advice on your own project. The first is to start with a good, complete plan and follow it through without short cuts. The second is to emphasize simplicity and easy upkeep.

The Diddle's formula also included a willingness to do most of their own work—and plenty of bricks. In drawing up their three-year plan, they decided that lawns take too much care and eliminated all but a small play lawn in back. They used only plants needing little attention—mainly clematis, boxwood, azaleas, junipers, and ajuga along walks.

The house they bought in Oakland, California, was on a sloping lot with little usable garden space. Mr. Diddle moved all the earth to level it. He also laid every brick for front and back terrace, steps and walls, and did most of the carpentry work. Mrs. Diddle took over the job of painting and did it all herself; both worked on the planting.

Only the outdoor fireplace and a retaining wall were built by outside workers—and a carpenter helped just one day in framing the heavy timbers for the outdoor shelter!

Studebaker Land Cruiser

Studebaker's the '49 buy word for a welcome new kind of low-cost mileage

ALL America knows that Studebaker sets the pace in distinctive styling—and this flight-streamed dream car is outstanding, too, for the way it holds down operating expense.

In gasoline savings alone, a new Studebaker does much to help keep many a family's income in balance with outgo.

What's more, owners of new Studebakers hardly ever face the problem of finding the money for costly repairs.

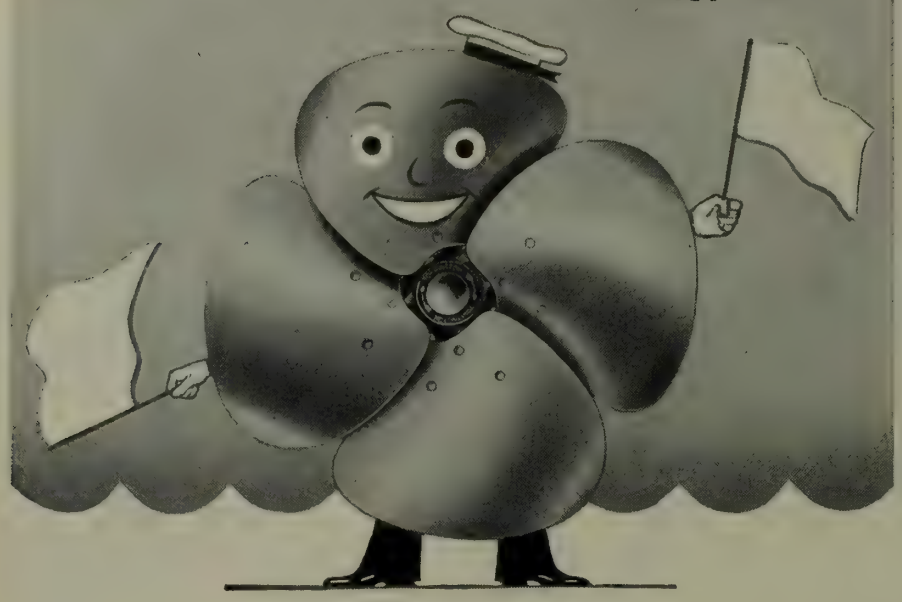
Even the brakes of a new Studebaker rarely require maintenance attention. They automatically adjust themselves to lining wear. You have the firm brake pedal feel of a brand new car for thousands of miles.

It's smart to be fussy this year in buying a new car. Make Studebaker's low-cost mileage your measure of real money's worth.

White sidewall tires, wheel trim rings, available on all models at extra cost.

You're delighted by the luxury of refreshingly different decorator fabrics. Pictured is the interior of Studebaker's long-wheelbase Land Cruiser sedan with nylon upholstery superbly tailored over foam-rubber seat cushions.

You use amazingly little gas even on long trips in a postwar Studebaker. Yes, whether on the open road, or in stop-and-go city driving, you can always count on a Studebaker engine to give brilliant, low-cost performance.



Your brakes keep a "like new" feel for many months and miles. They're the world's first self-adjusting brakes —a welcome Studebaker postwar advancement for increasing the safety, pleasure and economy of your driving.

Craftsmanship you can trust—Men of conscience as well as competence, many of them members of father-and-son teams, build Studebaker cars to the very highest standards of quality.

They put a lot

By Katherine M-P. Cloud

Heart of the Kingsley garden is the small terrace used for lounging and dining. An idea for your own garden is awning of slats from old Venetian blinds, woven together with waxed cord and spaced to let air through. Slats rest on wood framework supported by house on one end, iron poles on the other. The small pool was made with lots of help from willing neighbors

Photographs: Pritche

Your own child would appreciate this part of the garden—a corner reserved strictly for the things youngsters like to do. Overflow from the pool trickles on to form a small stream where the boys sail their boats and dig canals. Overflow is regulated so ground never becomes swampy in a little space

If your garden is small, you can get many ideas for making the most of it from the William K. Kingsleys. Their lot is 89 feet wide with an average depth of 75 feet—and the house takes up a good part of that.

They had another problem besides size, since their house is a twin. They used a high stake fence and evergreens and shrubs to give privacy. In their garden they put a terrace, pool, arbor, flowers, and a special corner for children—without crowding.

Now look at the garden plan and the pictures to see how the Kingsleys did it.

Gate from front opens on a narrow raised lawn between side of house and a low stone retaining wall. Climbing roses cloak house side; perennials grow against retaining wall. A mint garden at end of raised lawn may suggest a hobby garden of your own; this one has six kinds of mint

A tomato and lettuce patch is the strictly practical corner of the garden. An idea you may want to copy is the sash-covered frame built against a cellar window. Heat from basement and from sun on the sash gives enough warmth to start seeds in early spring. Mr. Kingsley uses it to beat the calendar when starting flowers

Meals are seldom eaten indoors in summer since terrace is located convenient to kitchen and food rolls out without effort on a serving cart. Sun awning shown on first page provides shade for terrace. Kingsley children heartily approve the idea

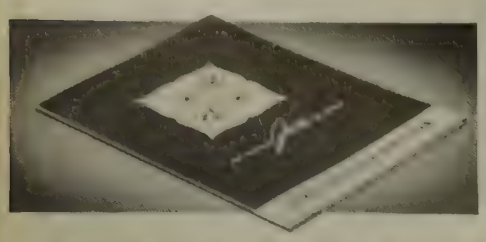
How to have warmth where you want it

No dusty, space-stealing radiators for today's home builders and buyers. Instead, slim Trane "Active Air" Convectors recessed in the walls, out of the way, painted to match any decorating scheme.

Self-propelled comfort is the secret. 1. Air is drawn in at the bottom of the Trane Convector. 2. Instantly heated by aluminum fins and copper tubes. 3. Warm air passes into the room and diffuses evenly from floor to ceiling.



So safe! So healthful! Unlike old-fashioned radiators, Trane Convectors have no exposed hot surfaces to burn hands or mar furniture. No drafty, cold spots near the floor. Less heat wasted overhead. Fuel costs are low.

Remodeling? Redecorating? It won't cost much to replace ugly radiators with handsome, compact Trane Convectors. They make the most of any steam or hot water system.

Brick steps connect lower service walk on left side of house with the back living terrace. The lawn above low brick wall in background is the only grass area the Diddles considered necessary; it is used as a play area for their two daughters

Since lot slopes steeply, retaining walls are necessary on all sides. This one in front is brick, and junipers are used on bank between wall and terrace. They'll do as well for you if you want a handsome slope planting that needs very little care

Upper service walk is bordered by blue ajuga which grows in shade and needs no mowing. Azaleas and ferns grow between low brick wall and a neighbor's retaining wall. Clematis vines trained on wires on retaining wall will soon hide concrete

Ways to improve your stonework

Ledge rock is one of those materials that seem made especially for use in the garden. It can be laid without mortar, is suitable to varied uses, and fits well into almost any surroundings. Best of all, its beauty improves with age as weather, moss, and plants make it appear to have been always a part of your garden.

You'll get more out of your stonework if you learn a few of the tricks of using it. The most important thing to remember is that dry walls (those made without mortar) are held together and resist the weight of earth behind them entirely by the weight and friction of the rocks.

For that reason, be sure to lay each stone so that it bears firmly on parts of at least two others below it. That way joints are broken, weight is distributed, and the stones hold each other in place.

You won't have to go below frost line for a foundation because rocks shift with frost action instead of cracking. Even so, the bottom layer of rocks should be laid in a trench about eight inches deep to prevent the wall from sliding under the thrust of earth behind it.

If you plan to put plants in your wall, put good fertile soil behind it and in the crevices, and leave planting pockets. It's easiest to set plants as you lay the stones.

Now read on to find other ways to make your stonework stronger and better to look at.

Photographs: Stanley

Here's the kind of mellow beauty you can expect from your rock wal after a few months' time. The slight slope-back of the wall face is needed in a planted wall in order to let rain fall on all plants and run back t roots. For advice on how to grow rock-wall plants, turn to page 11

Ways to improve your stonework

Stone needn't always be laid in straight lines; here the walls curve ou for easy and friendly access to steps. Mark out curves before you begi or you'll have trouble. Pick out rocks with rough arcs on one face fo rounded corners; shorter blocks are also handy for laying curve

Horizontal lines help make objects look lower and broader. Put that principle to work by using thinner blocks of stone wherever you want to minimize height. These steps look longer, lower, and safer because of such treatment. Be sure no part of stonework rests on steps or walks

Cabinets for special jobs

The two cabinets shown on this page are well designed for the jobs they perform. The telephone cabinet helps eliminate clutter, gives even your telephone corner a well-furnished look. The silver cabinet is designed to hold a service of 12 in flat silver, and its top is always handy to act as a serving table. If your spring plans include organizing space to better advantage, these cabinets may be the answer.

Telephone cabinet, with phone permanently tilted at best angle for dialing, has stationary top at right to hold lamp and form writing table. Space beneath holds several large directories. Lift top has holder for much-used phone numbers. Both cabinets shown on this page are made in mahogany or walnut with brass hardware.

Silver cabinet, lined with tarnish-resisting flannel, planned to hold a service of 12 in flat silver, fits into small space. The cabinet can be removed and the table that supports it can be used as an end table or a lamp table.

Fewer mosquitoes

Entomologists from the U. S. Department of Agriculture, in cooperation with Canadian authorities, have solved the problem of mosquitoes that breed in isolated pools left by melting snows. Now they dust the snow with DDT by plane. When the snow melts, the pools left behind contain a solution of DDT, enough to control effectively the mosquito wigglers that grow up to take the joy out of hours in the open. Because these breeding pools are not connected to treated bodies of water, the methods for mosquito control used in the past have not been effective.

Flowers bigger than dinner plates

For a flower to stop traffic, nothing I've seen beats the Henderson Hibiscus. These hybrids have flowers 12 to 14 inches across—exotic looking and really brilliant. They're an improvement on the hibiscus group known as the Mallow Marvels, and have been wintered successfully in Toledo, Ohio. But, even if you must treat them as bedding plants, and take them up in the fall, they're sensational. They're sold in mixed colors, and come in red, white, and pink.

Dandelions preferred

Too many dandelions may reduce your apple crop. Over in Indiana scientists have found that if orchards are heavily infested with dandelions, the bees prefer to work on these low-growing weeds rather than be buffeted by the winds higher up. As a result, pollination and the resulting apple-set are poorer. Thus, clearing out the dandelions may get you more apples.

Mushrooms to your order

For the past few months I've been cutting mushrooms from a new home outfit designed to supply family-size crops of these luxury items. This outfit consists of two trays filled with a suitable mixture of organic materials that have been sterilized to kill odors, treated with mushroom nutrients, and impregnated with pure-culture mushroom spawn. Any mushroom that shows up is an edible type. I'd say these were the flavorsome Meadow mushroom, (Psalliota capestris) with clear pink gills and firm white flesh. The only requirements in care are a temperature between 52 and 60 degrees, and reasonable attention to watering. Two trays (cost about $3 for two) produce for several months. I'm told these trays will again be generally available after October 1 from seedsmen.

Know your beans

Do you know that tiny immature buds often drop off your bean plants in hot weather and cut your yield greatly? You can check just how many you're losing by laying white paper under the plants during a hot spell. You'll be amazed. You can get around this loss by planting some of the new bean varieties bred especially for resistance to heat. Rival, Logan, and Florida Belle are all good green snap beans with this heat resistance. In Limas, choose Triumph, Peerless, and Fordhook 242.

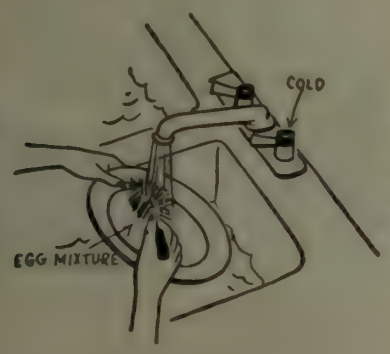
TIME-SAVING DISHWASHING

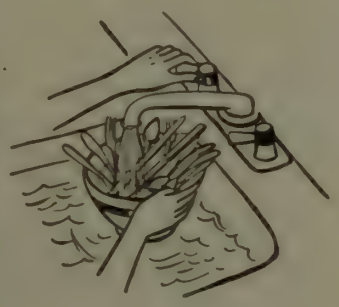


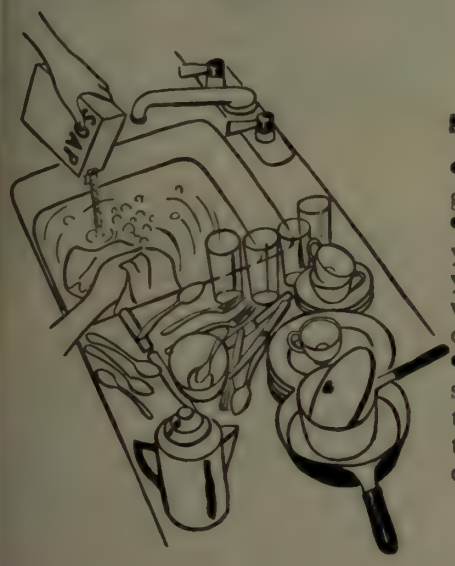
There's an easier way

By Janice Price

Clearing table

• Cut trips from dining room to kitchen by carrying dishes on a large tray, cart, or service table on wheels. See carts in "Put your work on wheels," page 70.



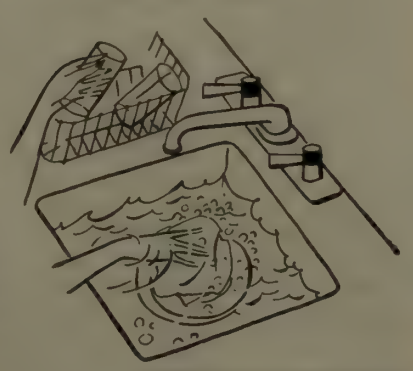


Scraping dishes

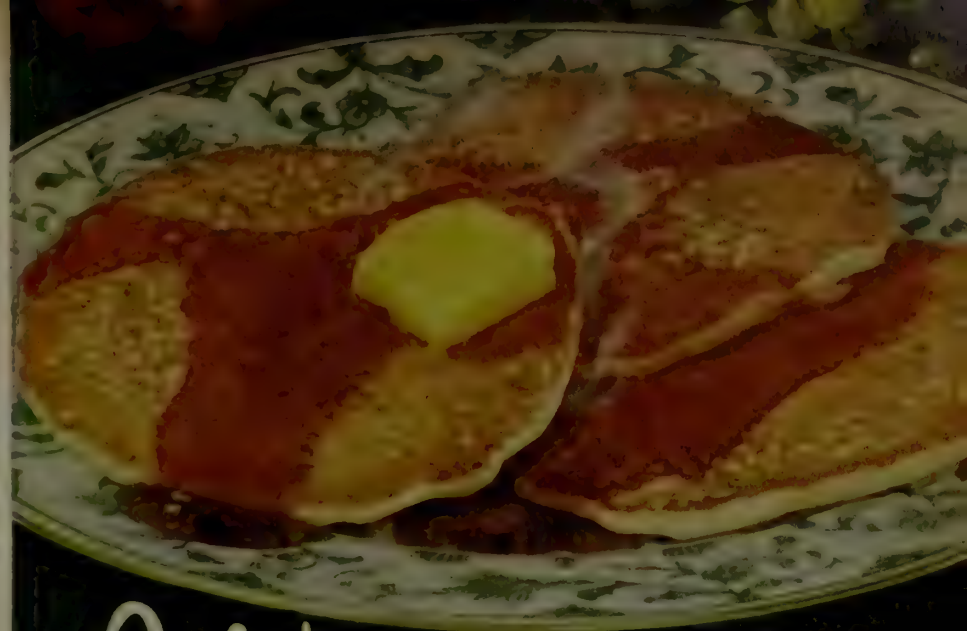
• Scrape dishes immediately, using a rubber scraper.
• Rinse under faucet, swishing with brush. Use cold water for egg, cheese, or starch mixtures; hot water for anything sticky or greasy.

Soaking

• Wipe greasy skillet with paper toweling.
• Put pans to soak immediately.
• Stand any sticky mixing spoons or utensils, handles upright, in a bowl of warm water.



Stacking



• Stack like kinds and sizes together.
• Place at sink side in the order you're going to pick them up as you wash them—glasses and silverware nearest the sink, plates and cups next, then pans.
• If your sink's so low you must stoop to wash dishes, put a rack in the bottom. Get your handy man to make one of wood, give it several coats of waterproof varnish.

Washing

• Use water as hot as the hands can stand.
• If you're right-handed, you'll save motions if your washing water is at the right and your rinsing section at the left. The right hand handles the dishcloth, the left hand places clean dishes in rinse compartment.

House o' my heart

Begins on page 52

Walls and ceilings throughout the house are knotty pine. Kitchen, which is small but handy and adequate for our needs, has off-white walls and a pale blue ceiling, with knots purposely wiped free of paint so their pattern will show

We have only one bedroom, but two bunks recessed into opposite walls of the living room give us added sleeping space. Bookshelves at head and bedding storage at foot make bunks convenient for guests to use and for me to make

Our bedroom has the same color scheme as the kitchen. All hardware is wrought iron, made by an old forging shop in nearby Kirtland. The doors have thumb latches—there's not even a doorknob to polish! Floors in bedroom and throughout the house are 2-by-6 oak planks stained dark and waxed

Certain breeds, like terriers, need plucking for a streamlined look

Should we clip our dog's hair? I notice many breeds are clipped before they are exhibited in dog shows. —R. A. S., Ohio.

Shearing your dog's hair down to the bare skin for so-called hot-weather comfort removes natural protection against insects, sunburn, colds and is uncomfortable. However, barbering a dog for streamlined appearance is something else. Standards of all terriers, poodles, and several other breeds, call for "plucking" or "trimming"—it's a must for the show ring. It means removal of excess hair in certain parts of the dog's body with a plucking instrument—not a clipping machine. It takes someone who knows each breed to do it according to standards.

We were given a 1-year-old dog who hasn't been taught obedience and good manners. Is he too old to train?—C. M. D., Rhode Island.

Personally, we don't believe there's a grain of truth in the old saying, "You can't teach an old dog new tricks." In fact, an 8-year-old purebred chow chow in Michigan, only recently trained, just won his CD (companion dog) obedience title. Another "wild," untrained 5-year-old Irish setter we know became the most gentlemanly animal you ever saw after a few weeks of training.

Our town is literally overrun with packs of roaming dogs. They kill chickens, destroy gardens, mess up lawns, molest children. What can we do about it?—Mrs. A. G. Mc., Oklahoma.

It's a tough situation. Try to enlist the help of your local newspaper to: (1) wage an educational campaign, directed to dog owners; (2) demand more and better dog-catching. Editorials should point up the hazards facing the roaming dog and his owner. A roaming dog is wide open to be stolen, hit by a car, poisoned, shot, killed or maimed in a fight. Pointing out the owner's liability for damage and injuries inflicted by his dog will jolt some owners too.

My dog shakes her head, runs in circles, paws at her ears, and whines. There is a slight discharge coming from the ear, plus a terrible odor. What is this?—Mrs. E. C. J., Indiana.

Your dog has a case of ear canker. It is very painful and quite common, especially among spaniels, setters, pointers and other long-eared breeds. It is a long time developing and takes patience to treat and cure. Take your dog to a veterinarian and have the imbedded wax, dirt, and hair cleaned out. This allows drainage of pus, lets medicine reach sore areas. Dogs, like men, need their ears washed. But never use soap and water. Dip prepared cotton swabs in alcohol and gently swab surface areas, also canals. Do this twice weekly.

Is it true cocker spaniels should not get their feet wet during their first year?—Mrs. P. M., Oregon.

Cockers are no more susceptible to chills, colds, distemper, and rheumatism than any other breed. Every dog should be dried off when coming in from wet or snow. All breeds are susceptible to distemper the first year and shouldn't be bathed—just brushed and combed —during this time.

My collie female recently lost her entire litter, and an autopsy showed the puppies were full of roundworms. We knew the mother had roundworms, but we were advised not to worm her during pregnancy. —Mrs. E. M. J., New York.

Ordinarily, a pregnant female should not be wormed beyond six weeks from the mating date. However, if worms are clearly evident, and the infestation seems heavy, it is best to have her wormed. Roundworms can lodge in the puppies within the womb. Conventional worm medicines are all toxic to the dog, hard on the pregnant female —the idea being to give a large enough dose to kill the worms, but too small to kill the dog. A new development for roundworm control which is virtually nontoxic is available upon prescription. It may be used on both dogs and cats.

I've complained to my neighbor about his dog's soiling my lawn. But he says it's my responsibility to erect a fence for the protection of my property. Who is right?—C. B. B., Iowa.

Your neighbor is wrong. It is up to him to control his pets, stock, fowl, or what have you, so they won't inflict damage or commit nuisance on the property of others. This has been firmly established in all courts of the land.

Fences

Fences weren't meant for barring,
Fences weren't meant to hide;
Fences weren't meant for warring,
Fences weren't meant for pride.

Fences weren't meant to be mean over,
For looking the other way;
Fences were meant to lean over
And pass the time of day.

Federal housing aid?

Yes

Another two million families in smaller communities had bad housing. An equal number of farm homes lacked the minimum requirements for health, safety, and decency. The committee found that over three million families were doubled up with in-laws and others or were living in trailers, tourist cabins, rooming houses, and other temporary accommodations.

These housing conditions constitute a social and economic evil. A special Senate committee, of which I was a member, received evidence that in city after city the centers of disease, delinquency, and crime were the areas of bad housing. When you think about the questions I asked you, you will not be surprised at the evidence we turned up. You will wonder, rather, how so many families living under this kind of environment continue to have any faith in American ideals and institutions and how so many of their sons were willing to fight for them.

No wonder the members of our Senate committee concluded that America should have a comprehensive program aimed at affording every family an opportunity to have a decent home. We decided that this program should shoot at building 1,200,000 town homes and 300,000 farm homes a year for 10 years. We made these recommendations in 1945. They were sustained in the conclusions of the Joint Committee on Housing early in 1948.

It was my privilege to join with Senator Wagner and Senator Taft in sponsoring legislation to carry out these recommendations. Its
